Throwing Out Unprofitable Nationally Advertised Goods or Keeping Them for Service

The prizes are awarded as follows in the second monthly contest on the above phase of the nationally advertised goods subject:

First Prize—GEORGE W. KAPPELT, Erie, Pa.
Second Prize—J. D. PATTERSON, Durham, N. C.
Third Prize—H. F. GRANZOW, Ashland, Pa.

It should be said again that prizes are awarded in these contests without any regard whatever to the views expressed, and the award to a given writer is not an affirmance of his views in the slightest degree.

By Geo. W. Kappelt, Erie, Pa.

Nationally advertised goods that pay no direct profit are sometimes the real money makers. An article like Shredded Wheat for instance. This article costs us here 10 cents a package wholesale; to meet competition it is sold in some localities at 10 cents a package retail. This one article when it is sold alone is a loss to the dealer. A very few buy this one article and nothing more. One of our every day occurrences are similar to this one. A lady stranger came into the store and asked if we had Shredded Wheat. She wanted two packages. They were placed on the counter before her and when asked if there was something more answered in the negative. She did not ask the price until she received her change, and when told it was 10 cents she was greatly pleased and said she would call again. Her next order started with two Shredded Wheat, two pounds of coffee, a pound of tea, etc. The profit on this customer's order every week is worth more to us than the profits on half a case of Shredded Wheat at 15 cents a package. This is a case that is repeated a good many times. We enjoy the reputation of handling Nationally advertised goods and advertise this strong to the trade. Any article worth the reputation of the manufacturer and the good meney spent for advertising same is worth the space it takes on any man's shelf or floor.

Ivory soap is another of the Nationally advertised no retail profit goods, yet no grocery store is complete without this soap. Fels Naptha soap, as staple as dinner to a hungry man, is as necessary an article as a grocer can carry in his stock. These two articles of soap, sold at six for 25 cents, are bought at from $3.80 to $4 per 100 bars. They are very seldom sold without the purchaser buying other goods. All goods are not Nationally advertised, some are sold almost at a fixed price, others are not.

A reputation is worth a good deal, be it in person or in stock. A man is sometimes judged by the company he keeps, so it is with a stock of goods. A goodly sprinkling of Nationally advertised products among a clean stock of goods gives it all an appearance of quality. The up-to-date housewife is wide-awake to the fact that the dealer who can supply her with the goods she thinks are right and has a line to follow up on that compares with a class of quality goods as most Nationally advertised goods are, is the dealer to buy from.

I have never seen where a real salesman has ever lost any of his selling ability selling a line of Nationally advertised goods. A good clerk who has the attention of a customer and cannot show his selling ability because the customer knows what she wants is in the wrong place.

My experience with this line of goods is not a chick in age or size, it is fifteen years of practical grocery selling.

If I was to actually say there are Nationally advertised goods that are not showing a profit I would have a hard time proving to myself which they were, for all that are sold for cost are carrying other goods with them that more than make up the difference in profit.

Give me the Nationally advertised goods, profit or no profit.

By J. D. Patterson, Durham, N. C.

It seems to me that there is less to say in this, the second contest, than in the first one, and since my weakness is often saying too much of not the right thing, it may be well for me that I cannot have as much to say this time.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" expressed my ideas well when it was suggested in the issue of December 8th that it is not the best policy to make sharp discrimination between Nationally advertised goods as a class and non-advertised goods as a class; that in each line that brand should be sold, advertised or non-advertised, which is easiest to sell, gives greatest satisfaction to buyers and pays the fairest profit.

However, I am inclined to believe our opinions would part when it came to a point of drawing the line between the two and deciding which should be thrown out and which retained.

It must be conceded that some Nationally advertised articles pay a very satisfactory profit. I have in mind at this moment two articles—Welch's grape juice and Walter Baker's chocolate and cocoa. In communities wherein the price is not cut the profit on these articles ought to satisfy the most ambitious (if not greedy) dealer. But when the great list of articles are canvassed will we not find that these two are numbered with the exceptions, as against the rule?

In the first place I believe a retailer should be satisfied with a fair and reasonable profit. But generally speaking, when a Nationally advertised article pays no retail profit I believe it should unhesitatingly be thrown out of stock, and for reasons I will mention: Everybody knows merchants are in business to succeed and make money. And when a dealer sells an article at cost or for less it is believed at once that there is some covered way of "getting back" at you.

First then, put a profit on every item for the sake of being frank. For when a person feels frank others (his customers) catch the spirit of it.

Second, if a grocer gets to making more than he thinks he is justly entitled to, let him give the customers "dividends" in an open way. He will find plenty of opportunities to give away all the surplus he does not need.

Third, is it any more the retailer's duty to sell goods for his customer's convenience than it is the manufacturer's duty to make them for the merchant's convenience?

Fourth, is it good policy for the retailer, who has too much work and expense at the best, to put his money in, give shelf room to, and spend valuable time checking out numerous articles which return him no profit? His time might be spent more profitably it seems to me. In a credit business the dealer pays for a large part of his stock long before he is reimbursed by his customers.

Fifth, I believe dealers would be better off if they were more independent. First be right and then independent. Handle a line in which every article gives "value received." It takes time to build up right brands all through, but it pays. Handle what is best for the consumer, not always what he thinks is best. The dealer who spends all of his time in his store ought to know more about his line than the consumer. And a merchant certainly should not be without honor in his home town, and the people take the manufacturer's word before his grocer's. So I say talk articles which you know are good. Do not necessarily substitute without the consent of the one "substituted on," but convince him. Do not be concerned about

By H. F. Granzow, Ashland, Pa.

Answering your question No. 2, generally speaking, where a Nationally advertised article pays no profit, should it be thrown out of stock, or should the retailer sell it for his customer's convenience, charging same to the cost of "service," I would advise putting all articles that don't pay a fair profit to the rear or out of sight and pushing something just as good, which can be done with tactful salesmanship and a positive guarantee.

Don't let the customer know or think you are making no profit on the article called for, the customer is usually tickled to death to buy anything at cost.

To-day there are too many advertised articles sold that don't pay enough net profit.

I would not throw them out of stock but would use every endeavor to sell a similar article in its place or ask enough profit to make it pay.

Every up-to-date store is expected to keep everything that is likely to be called for. It would be foolish and unbusiness-like to throw it out entirely.

Without making the "goat" out of any particular article, I know that almost all popular priced articles that are Nationally advertised cost 50 cents a dozen for 5-cent, 90 cents to $1 for 10-cent and $2.25 to $2.40 for 25-cent articles. Adding the freight, 5 to 10 per cent., and cost of doing business 15 per cent., leaves no profit, and often actual loss, as the actual gross profit is too often only 20 per cent

The argument advanced that advertised goods are more and easier sold cuts no ice at the end of the year when you, after doing a nice business, take stock account strike the balance sheet and wonder where the profit went and

Washington Supreme Court Gives Flour Manufacturer $1,000 Damages Against Retail Cutter

Says Manufacturer Having No Monopoly Can Maintain His Own Prices and Cause Others to Maintain Them. National Secretaries Plan to Amend Sherman Anti-Trust Law.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

Cleveland, Ohio,
December 31, 1913.

We are in receipt of letter from Vice-President F. B. Connolly, in which he tells of a case in Washington against Swanson, a grocer, who sold flour at a cut price. The mills entered suit and the Supreme Court of Washington has just given the flour company a verdict for $1,000 damages against the retailer who cut the price on the flour.

The following is copy of telegram just received from Vice-President Connolly:—

> Washington State Supreme Court, by vote eight to one to-day reverses lower court, holding Fisher Flour Mills are entitled to $1,000 damages from Swanson, grocer, who cut their maintained price on flour. They hold individual manufacturer having no monopoly can maintain prices on his own brands.

Mr .Connolly also writes that two of the largest local canneries have for the last two years issued a card telling at what price the butter is to be sold and seeing to it that no one cuts the price on their commodity. The grocers are assured a profit and it cannot be said of them, as it is of some others, that butter is one of the household necessities which is being sold at less than cost.

There is a great difference of opinion as to the advisability of a fixed or maintained price by manufacturers, but the fact that we are making a fair profit on all goods where the price is maintained should silence any criticism. I hope the day will soon come when we shall have more goods that will be handled on a profit, and that the day of the price-cutter, or better known as the trade pirate, will have been a thing of the past as far as staple commodities are concerned at least.

I recently attended in New York City the meeting of the Committee of the National Food Trades Organization, which has for its object the uniformity of all State and National food laws. After an all day session it was agreed to call a convention of delegates from all the food trade manufacturers and distributors in the country to meet in New York within sixty days to take such action as would bring about uniform laws in the quickest possible way.

It is almost impossible at the present time to know what to do either with the State law itself, and more especially with the differences between the Federal law and the several State food laws.

Since my last letter I attended a meeting in Chicago of the secretaries of the following National organizations to consider an amendment to the Sherman anti-trust law: Jewelers', Hardware, Lumbermen, Coal, Butchers', Druggists', Plumbers', Implement Dealers' and Retail Grocers', the National Retail Grocers' Association being represented by Mr. S. Westerfeld and myself. Every condition in the retail trade was thoroughly discussed and plans mapped out to successfully bring about, if such a thing can be, an amendment to the Sherman act which would give the retailers of the United States the right and privilege to meet and discuss matters pertaining to the welfare of their business.

JOHN A. GREEN,
Secretary National Retail Grocers' Association.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" has received the following additional report of the Chicago meeting referred to in Mr. Green's letter, from J. R. Moorehead, secretary National Federation of Retail Merchants:

On the 17th of November Mr. J. R. Moorehead, secretary of the National Federation of Retail Merchants, sent a letter to the National secretaries of ten lines of retail business and also to several secretaries of retail coal and lumber associations, they having no National organization, suggesting the calling of a conference for the consideration and future co-operation in the matter of anti-trust legislation pending in Congress, particularly with reference to that affecting the future activities of retail association effort.

In response to this letter suggesting this conference, nine of the twelve interests addressed responded, and on December the 18th, at the La Salle Hotel in Chicago, there came together from one to five representatives of nine of the largest retail association interests in the country. They included the National Hardware Association, Retail Grocers, Plumbers, Druggists, Vehicle and Implement Dealers, Jewelers, Butchers, and representatives from several coal and lumber organizations, some thirty-five in all.

The meeting was organized by the election of Mr. H. L. Laird, secretary of the Northwestern Retail Coal Dealers' Association, as chairman, and Mr. J. R. Moorehead as secretary.

Mr. Moorehead then made a statement to the meeting as to the reasons why the same was called and recited some of the conditions and situations as they existed to-day relative to the attitude and possible effect of adverse legislation now pending in Congress.

Mr. L. C. Boyle, an attorney of Kansas City, who is one of the attorneys in the civil case of the Governmet against the Northwestern Lumbermen's Association, then addressed the conference and at the conclusion of his address a committee was appointed, one from each line of business, to confer with Mr. Boyle relative to the preparation of a suitable bill upon which all retail interests could unite to be presented in Congress.

On motion it was also agreed that representatives should be sent to Washington for the purpose of presenting the retailers' side of the case to the committee having charge of such legislation, and also to the President and others, if possible.

Thirty-six Per Cent. Cheaper to Deliver by Motor Wagon Than by Horse.

So Says a Contributor, Who Gives Figures to Prove It. Cost of Motor Delivery 11¼ Cents Per Mile, Against 17¾ Cents by Horse. Costs $16.75 to do Work With Horses that Motor Wagons Can do for $10.97.

Detailed reports of the operation of motor trucks and delivery wagons in the service of thirty prominent companies engaged in various lines of business in fifteen different cities were recently searched for reliable records of operating costs. In many cases these cost records were itemized and covered periods of a year or more, sometimes embracing the figures for fleets of from five to fifteen or more vehicles. These data were analyzed and tabulated so as to show the cost of haulage and delivery per day, per mile, per ton mile and per package.

Wherever possible the cost of performing the same service with horses and wagons was set opposite the figures for motor haulage for comparison. These horse costs were given in each case by the companies owning the motor vehicles from their own experience with horses engaged in the same service, so the comparison is in the highest degree fair and reliable

The result of this study indicates that the average cost of hauling in the city by motor is 11¼ cents per ton mile, as compared with 17¾ cents by horse. This represents a saving of 36 per cent. The average cost of deliveries by department stores, furniture, clothing and grocery stores, meat markets and electric light companies is shown to be approximately 8 cents by motor and 16 cents by horse, representing a saving of more than 50 per cent. by the former method. The analysis shows that the average cost of operating motor trucks and delivery wagons, embracing all sizes of both gasoline and electric machines, is $10.97 a day. This covers all items of operation and maintenance, such as driver, garage, interest and depreciation. The average cost of doing equivalent work with horses is $16.75 a day, which represents the expense of from two to three wagons, with drivers. Here is a saving of more than 34 per cent.

On this showing it is evident that the motor vehicle offers abundant opportunity of reducing transportation costs in the immediate future, and that the reduction will be very substantial—from one-third to one-half.

WITH THE EDITOR

Again.

Last week was reported the ending of the Government case against the wholesale lumber dealers, one of whose offenses was combining to prevent the large consumer of lumber from buying direct from the producer. The Missouri Supreme Court held this to be an illegal restraint of trade.

This week there is to be chronicled the ending of the Government's case against the combination known usually as the Jewelry Trust. This was begun some time ago and charged among other things, that the combination, through secret agreements, prevented manufacturers from selling direct to retailers, department stores or mail-order houses in the United States without the intervention of the wholesaler or jobber. The trust compelled the retailer to purchase direct from the wholesaler or jobber. It was claimed by the Government that by the secret arrangements the trust was able to eliminate all competition in the jewelry trade except between wholesalers and jobbers. The retailer was excluded from consideration altogether.

There is not to be a trial of this case, for the combination now goes to the Government, admits its guilt on all points and agrees to reform its practices. The Government will accordingly drop the matter.

This case is cited as additional proof that from now on the buyer of anything is likely to be permitted without interference to buy in the market to which the size of his purchases, and not his class, fits him.

Cut Prices and the Manufacturer.

A considerable number of manufacturers of proprietary products, not so much in the food lines as outside, are much displeased with some conclusions expressed by the writer in an article appearing last week in this and other papers on "Is This Restraint of Trade?" In that article the writer expressed the opinion that many manufacturers could lessen price-cutting on their goods, if they wished to, and he furthermore took the liberty of making some suggestions as to how it might be done. These suggestions are amplified in another article on the subject which appears in this issue.

The united contention from manufacturers who have expressed themselves on the subject since the first article appeared, is that they cannot stop cutting on their goods, that the court decisions on restraint of trade prevent them from doing so, and that as much as they regret the widespread price-cutting, they are powerless to prevent it. Of course the manufacturer's position is quite easily understood. Take a brand of laundry soap as a possible illustration. The regular price of the small cake is 5 cents. Cutters, department stores, drug stores, or some other people, have used it as a leader so much that the price is depressed to three cents, which leaves no profit for anybody. The general retail trade becomes incensed at the manufacturer of this soap for standing by and letting anybody who will cut his product, and makes sharp demands upon him to step in and stop it. The manufacturer's position is delicate. On the one hand the cutters are selling lots of soap—he wants their orders, which he will lose if he interferes with their cutting. On the other hand is the regular trade, demanding that he stop the cutter from cutting. What a satisfying refuge to be able to do nothing beyond pleading: "I would stop the cutting if I could, gentlemen, but the court decisions prevent me." This is precisely the refuge which a large number of manufacturers in all lines are using, and it is not to be wondered at that they grow peevish when somebody even intimates that it is a false refuge. For it is a false refuge. There has never been a law or a court decision, and there never will be one, which makes it illegal for the owner of an article to dictate the price at which it shall be resold by the person buying it of him, as one of the conditions of his willingness to sell. In the application of this fundamental principle, which we repeat, nobody has ever denied, there lies a perfectly practicable plan by which a manufacturer can defeat the cutter, if he really wants to. To be sure, he may find it some bother and trouble; he may even lose a little business, but all that is another matter. He will not violate any law or any court decision, that is as sure as anything can be.

Foolish.

Some of our esteemed contemporaries are in our judgment making a mountain out of the merest mole hill of an incident that recently transpired between the Cream of Wheat Co. and S. W. Roth, publisher of the "Retailers' Journal" of Chicago. The latter publication makes a specialty of paid write-ups, contracting with various concerns to publish a news article about their plant or their product. To pay for this the subject of the write-up either pays some cash, or more usually, buys a certain number of copies of the "Retailers' Journal."

Recently Roth approached the Cream of Wheat Co. with this scheme and got the following letter:—

CREAM OF WHEAT CO.
Manufacturers of Cream of Wheat.
Minneapolis, Aug. 12, 1913.

Mr. S. W. Roth,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:—Replying to your favor of August 8th, will say I hardly think it would take 1,600 words to tell all that there is about the manufacture of Cream of Wheat.

We simply put up sawdust in tins and our nigger persuades the public to buy it. They're awful foolish to do so, although it is really good to eat.

Yours truly,
CREAM OF WHEAT CO.
By E. Mapes.

The publisher of the "Retailers' Journal," thus refused business, got fearfully sore and published the above letter as something reflecting on the Cream of Wheat Co. in some way. A few other trade publications have shown a tendency to do likewise, the esteemed "Retail Grocers' Advocate" of New York referring to it as "sarcastic indiscretion."

What sublime foolishness! Perhaps the humor of Mr. Mapes of the Cream of Wheat Co. was a trifle heavy—perhaps it might also be said to have been ill-timed—but unmistakably it was still humor. And furthermore, it was entirely at his own expense. It is both venomous and stupid for the "Retailers' Journal" to pretend to see anything else in it merely because it conveyed a refusal to advertise.

A part of National Secretary Green's letter, published this week, is quite inexplicable. He says the secretaries of nine National trade organizations met in Chicago recently to arrange for presenting to Congress an amendment to the Sherman anti-trust law which will "give the retailers of the United States the right and privilege to meet and discuss matters pertaining to the welfare of their business." They have that right now. Nobody has ever sought to take it from them. What does Mr. Green mean?

Our Enormous Consumption of Onions from Egypt.

Egyptian onion growing for export has developed to considerable proportions The exports for 1912 totaled $1,920,257, as against $992,820 for 1908. The declared exports to the United States amounted to $317,990 in 1912, the other large buyers being England, Austria, Germany, Italy and France. Owing to unfavorable market conditions in the United States and England, the exports for the first nine months of 1913 show a falling off of $548,875, as compared with the corresponding period of the previous year.

Holiday Business Reported Good. Interesting Development of the Parcel Post Business. Commercial Frauds to be More Thoroughly Prosecuted. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

New York, January 1, 1914.

The holiday trade of the retail grocers has been generally brisk, according to reports, and this leads the wholesalers to expect a brisk trade now that the holidays have passed.

One result of the recent agitation over the price of eggs is that a large part of the public now looks with more favor than formerly on storage eggs. Families which formerly refused to buy or use any eggs except those that were represented as strictly fresh, now find entire satisfaction in storage eggs. Apparently a large part of the public has been educated to the fact that storage eggs may be really high-grade eggs. This seems to be one benefit, at least, of the agitation started by the recent high prices of fresh eggs.

Another development observed in retail stores is an increased tendency to display stocks of oleomargarine. This comes doubtless because of the court decisions favorable to colored oleomargarine, when the color comes naturally from the ingredients.

A number of houses are making energetic mail campaigns with free orders on retail grocers. The manufacturer gets from the retailer a list of his customers and then mails to each customer an order that will be filled without charge on presentation to the retailer. The order contains the name of the customer and also the name of the grocer, so that it cannot readily be transferred.

The H. M. Anthony Co., 261 Greenwich street, is using this plan by sending out free orders for half-pound cans of Rumford baking powder. It is explained on the order that the grocer will fill it and retain it as his voucher to the manufacturer.

Thomas J. Lipton, 149 Franklin street, is sending out in a similar way postal card orders for 10-cent tins of Ceylon or India tea.

The Franco-American Food Co. sends out small cans of soup. These are delivered by parcels post, after a previous notice by mail, to the list furnished by the grocer. The Hamilton Corporation, 24 West Forty-fifth street, is sending out announcements of its premium plan in following up the campaign. The company sends a quantity of coupons to each housewife as a starter, with notice that the Franco-American soups have coupons as part of the labels.

All this work in pushing specialties is done by mail and parcels post, instead of the older plan of sending men or boys to deliver circulars or samples from door to door. The mail plan, with the particular grocer's name mentioned on each order, is more to the advantage of the retailer, since the customers are made to understand that the courtesy is extended through the medium of their own retailer.

A number of other companies are engaged in the same kind of campaigns.

Commercial organizations of various kinds have united in a request to District-Attorney Whitman to establish in his office a special bureau for the prosecution of commercial frauds. This bureau, if established, would give special attention to cases in which retail and wholesale merchants are accused of defrauding creditors. This line of cases arises out of bankruptcies that are crooked, or supposed to be crooked.

There has been difficulty in the past in getting District Attorneys to take up such cases. The explanation from the attorneys has been that merchants were themselves to blame for this condition. It was stated that creditors, after they do succeed in getting such cases started, are likely to withdraw their support if it afterward appears that there is a chance of getting some sort of a settlement. Then it becomes difficult for the District Attorney to hold the necessary witnesses and to prove the case. The District Attorneys do not desire the Criminal Courts to be used as mere collection agencies.

If the new bureau shall be established the commercial organizations promise to co-operate in bringing only proper cases to its attention and in assisting the District Attorney to the close of each case.

The largest single cargo of Argentine meats arriving here direct from South America was that of the steamship "Elstree Grange," which docked in New York this week. It is said that the entire cargo was shipped to independent packers and dealers who are actual competitors of the Swift and Armour companies. It is also said that this marks a beginning of genuine and permanent competition in the sale of South American meats in this country. More than a dozen independent butchers, it is said, will divide the cargo which arrived this week, embracing 1,700 tons of beef, mutton and lamb.

It lies in the fact that you, we, all of us, have sold too many goods on which we lost money, all because the manufacturer or his representatives figure to our face 33⅓ per cent., while in the office "they" figure that we should handle their product at an advance of 20 per cent.

I believe these questions are brought to our notice through the "Grocery World and General Merchant" to bring us to a realization that we are not in business for our health, or just to kill time, and if the retailer wants to stay in the business for profit he must have at his elbow a percentage list and mark and note every article that is not paying, to use our best endeavor to realize a fair profit on the same.

No grocer can throw out of stock any article that his trade demands, and as his stock consists chiefly of Nationally advertised products it is a matter for the grocer to decide the method of procedure whereby he may realize a profit on the goods he sells.

I believe if the grocer has the right kind of a backbone and is making a thorough study of his business and has the confidence of his patrons he will not be asked to handle any article that has National advertising prominence at a loss to himself.

Further, I do not believe that there is one article that can be mentioned that has such prominence that is being sold by all retailers at a loss; it is the exception rather than the rule. Such advertising to any manufacturer would utterly destroy any friendly relations that might exist between the two and would mean a curtailment of his output sooner or later.

I have been i t the grocery business for a number of years and I am yet to be informed of any manufacturer suggesting or encouraging the retailer to sell his goods at a loss. On the contrary, he is only too willing to lend his

I have watched the early success and later failure of a number of grocerymen and, having ascertained the reason, I have found in the majority of cases that in the conduct of the business the proprietor had failed to anchor himself very safely to the solid rock of honesty.

This may not have any direct bearing on the subject, but to my mind it brings out this point, that if a business is to succeed it must enjoy the confidence of its patrons. In so doing it will sell its goods at a profit whether they are advertised or otherwise.

By Robert H. Wenner, Allentown, Pa.

In generally speaking to question No. 2, where a Nationally advertised article pays no retail profit should it be thrown out of stock or should the retailer still sell it for his customers' convenience and charge to cost of service.

I think in the grocery business there is enough to charge loss to the cost of service. Do not take such articles as some Nationally advertised articles to charge to the cost of service; for instance, take Nationally advertised 10-cent articles, which are mostly based on 95-cent basis and some even more. Does that pay to handle such goods for customers' convenience and charge to cost of service?

I say no. You take the 5 and 10-cent stores. They handle a few 10-cent articles for customers' convenience, but the balance of the dime articles they clear over one-half of their profit sales.

Why should the grocer have such articles in stock on the basis which I have quoted above. John Bowen is one of the oldest retail grocery houses in Allentown, which is still carried on to this day. The older partner, who is deceased, had always remarked that articles sold at 10 cents that cost more than 85 cents a dozen do not pay to handle, and there is truth to that saying.

If the manufacturer and the jobber cannot handle these goods at the price they did fifteen or twenty years back, how can we grocers handle these articles which cost us 95 cents and $1 a dozen for which we got 10 cents fifteen years ago and did not pay over 90 cents? The jobber, when he has 50 or 25 cents on a barrel of sugar or a bag of sugar, knows that profit is sure to him. The grocer not; he may recover $1 on a barrel of sugar. He is not sure of it till he is through selling every pound out of the barrel and he fails to have his profit. So it is with vegetables, smoked meats and so on.

Understand we are not pushing Nationally advertised articles aside. We are not blinded to the fact that Nationally advertised articles are the things of the day and will be so every day to come, but why should the grocer not have a reasonable profit on these goods which the manufacturer and jobber knows. For that reason the grocer should try and sell goods that give reasonable profit and take hold of articles that are not Nationally advertised. Just the other week the King Midas flour mills had canvassers from house to house in our town and selling the flour at 45 cents, when our price was 50 cents for a 12-pound bag.

Taking on an average in a city there are 8 bags of pastry flour sold to one of bread flours, to my experience such as King Midas flour; why should we not have a fair profit? With King Midas flour asking more than any other Western flour in price, here is where the manufacturers are taking advantage of the grocers making buying and selling prices. Though as clerk I feel as if I should help the grocers in general to take a step to better results in handling Nationally advertised articles.

All these articles we should charge to the service or loss for the convenience of the customers' sake.

Taking the expenses of the grocers to-day are one-quarter more than they were ten years ago, such as rents, hire, improvements of all kinds of machinery and the latest of scales which trade requires, I think it is time for all of us grocers to make up our minds and push more articles that are not Nationally advertised as long as they give results.

One more article to quote to you. Take the Clicquot Club drinks, which are sold for 10 cents over the whole State and cost net $2.10 for twenty-four bottles per case, a trifle cheaper in lots and article is apt to break in handling, and the empty bottles they redeem you are not sure of, so you cannot charge on your profit. Is it not time to throw out of stock such goods and not charge to cost of service or for the convenience of the jobbers or manufacturers?

I am sure you grocers will agree with me.

In reference to the subject, where a Nationally advertised article pays no retail profit should it be thrown out of stock or should the retailer continue to sell it for his customer's convenience, etc., I cannot refrain from making a few remarks, although I rarely ever bother about such things.

The best managed retail business will have shrinkages and losses in spite of everything, enough without deliberately buying and carrying in stock an article which he knows and intends to sell at a loss.

Of course I am having reference to a legitimate business, which if one wishes to conduct he cannot afford to buy any article, no matter whether Nationally advertised or not, with the view of selling it at a loss, for to do so is in plain words committing financial suicide.

But, if as some choose, they want to sell certain articles at cost or below as trade winners, "leaders," and then try to make up the loss by hanging on too much profit on others, that is gambling, and surely gambling is not legitimate.

In answer to question No. 2, generally speaking, where a Nationally advertised article pays no retail profit, should it be thrown out of stock or should the retailer still sell it for his customer's convenience, charging his loss to the cost of "service." From my own experience and standpoint as a merchant, not as a storekeeper, I refuse to sell an article that does not pay me a living profit, no matter how much it is Nationally advertised, and the time to refuse to handle Nationally advertised goods is when it is first put on the market, and to illustrate to you my argument and prove to you that I have done it before and do it at all times, and what I can do other good merchants can do, too, providing they will take their place in business as a real merchant or grocer, not as a storekeeper.

Not very long ago Ammon & Person, of Jersey City, N. J., started a Nationally advertised campaign on a certain product called Baby butterine; the price to me was 22 cents a pound and the selling price not less than 28 cents. When their representative came to see me several times and I had examined their piece of goods carefully and looked into their proposition, not all for their benefit, but all for my own as a merchant, I said to him, "I refuse to take your butterine in my store." "Why," he said to me, "we are spending a fortune advertising this particular brand of butterine all over the billboards, newspapers, etc.," and they are doing it, too. They are running pages and half pages in my local newspaper, and they are doing it yet, and the names of the dealers who sell their goods, but I as a merchant it did not bother me. I have bought of them at the same time a good piece of 1-pound print butterine for 17 cents a pound, but not Nationally advertised, and retail it for 25 cents a pound and make a profit of 8 cents a pound, and 3 cents less to my consumers, and was my own boss in my business, which every good grocer should be. I did not lose any butterine trade, and my competitors did not sell to my customers the Nationally advertised goods; if they did I would like to know, and what I have done others can do if they would be merchants, not storekeepers

I am not keeping a store for the manufacturers, and I am not in business for my health. I am in business to make all I can, give my trade the benefit of my knowledge, give them quality, quantity and value, and some left for myself, too.

When a representative of a new article calls on me I take pains in looking over the article he is offering, if possible to taste or if smell helps I make an effort to do it, then I listen to his price, examine carefully, ask what it is sold for, what is the price to me, and then take my pencil and figure the profit, and if the profit and quality do not suit I refuse to put it in my store no matter how much National advertising has been done on it; there are others just as good and sometimes better in these great markets of ours. And when I offer a better article to my customer I have given her something she does not know about, and if found O. K. (which I know she will, otherwise I would not sell it to her), then she has something to talk about; in some cases about fine quality, new article she did not know about, and in many cases 1, 2 or 3 cents lower than she saw the same thing advertised for. I am certain she will tell her friends about it, where she bought it, how nice it is and the reasonable price she got it at the merchant grocer around the corner, not at the Nationally advertised grocer that is giving her what she asked for, and oftentimes I gain friends, customers and increase my business from the little things I have described above, and from my experience I have never lost a customer for not giving her anything she asked for, but better in some cases or just as good.

The trouble with some storekeepers is they are too lazy to work; they have no ambition for business, they can't sell anything that is good, they only can sell what customers ask for, they are not qualified to be a real grocer, only a storekeeper; they buy what people ask for, they pay their bills when people pay them, and if the people do not pay them they are through keeping a store, and let the jobber or manufacturer worry, but if they would study their trade they would realize the signal danger of selling Nationally advertised goods without a profit; they would sell goods that there is more quality and profit for them, and they would all unite together into one good, strong, powerful body and say at one sound, "Mr. Manufacturer, give us quality, quantity, value and a living profit or we will refuse to handle your goods." What would be the result? The result would be good, great and wonderful.

Let us hope and pray that the time will be here soon when the storekeepers will realize that they can't keep store any longer, as their neighbor merchant or grocer has all the business, and they made good, and they will get tired and close

In answer to your question, generally speaking, where a Nationally advertised article pays no retail profit should it be thrown out of stock or should the retailer sell it for his customer's convenience, charging his loss to the cost of "service," I will say that such articles should not be thrown out of stock for the following reasons:—

There are many customers (particularly women) who have the notion that nothing but a certain brand of goods will fill their order to suit their taste and ideas. No doubt the certain brand is one that they have seen advertised daily or weekly for months and perhaps years. They have read the well composed and catchy advertisements intelligently and are convinced as to the quality of goods advertised. Then there are many who have had the advertised brands demonstrated to them by trained salesmen (which all of we grocers should be), who use the very best food possible to serve with the article they are demonstrating, and the result is that the customers say, hereafter there will be no other brand of goods for me.

Therefore when a customer of that kind asks for a certain advertised article I think it is best to hold her trade by having it in stock even at a very small profit.

We may be able to induce her into buying another brand of goods at the same price, which means a larger profit for us, but if that brand is not a little better than her advertised brand I can see her ordering her next bill of groceries at a store where they carry her favorite brand of baked beans, ketchup, olive oil, corn flakes, etc. I do not think it necessary to push the advertised poor profit making goods out to every customer if we have a non-advertised brand as good and with a little better profit attached.

Neither do I believe in trying to substitute a good advertised brand with a trashy piece of goods, but with a brand which we know to have the quality back of it. If a customer gets the brand of goods which she likes at a certain store she is going to tell her neighbor where to get it if she has the opportunity. I think it pays the merchant in several ways to carry the certain lines of advertised goods which are called for by their customers.

By A. F. Day, Ashtabula, Ohio.

I am a subscriber to and enjoy reading the "Grocery World and General Merchant" and get very profitable pointers in so doing. The question as to handling goods with no profit does not appeal to the merchant in general, but if your trade demands the article my judgment would be to accommodate your trade as far as possible, and by so doing you gain their good will and at the same time hold them as valuable customers.

By L. E. Young, Medina, N. Y.

I have come to believe that articles which do not pay the merchant at least a clean 25 per cent. on the cost price should be slowly but surely eliminated, and I thoroughly believe that the man behind the counter has the power entirely in his own hands to do so. He can sell any unadvertised article of merit which he may take hold of, in spite of the advertising done for the other goods. Of course a merchant must know something about the goods he is trying to sell, and have faith enough in them to guarantee absolutely. I strongly advocate the using of the different brands of goods in the homes of the merchant himself and his clerks, thus getting knowledge first hand—the only kind which gives confidence in selling. Of course tact must be used in persuading people to change to something new. The running down of the goods called for will not help the case. If the customer calls for some advertised brands, after the merchant has got the goods called for, he should then suggest that he has another brand which he would like to have him try the next time. In very many cases the customer will ask to try it right away.

I would not advise the throwing out entirely of advertised goods paying no profit to the retailer, for a customer may get a bad impression of the store if the merchant does not carry the goods at all. But with some of the goods on hand he is in a better position to suggest his favorite brand which he thinks is as good or even a little better than the one asked for. He can state that his customers are now calling for same and are using the goods with evident satisfaction. My advice, therefore, is: Keep some of the advertised goods, but sell those of equal merit which pay a profit.

By A. Tarbet, Philadelphia, Pa.

In considering the question whether a Nationally advertised article pays no retail profit, there may be a wide difference of opinion. In the first place, does a manufacturer of any food product spend thousands of dollars in the advertising of his product and set a price that will leave no profit to the seller? To me it does not seem good business He has got to give the retailer some inducement to stock the advertised article.

Let us consider that a manufacturer commences manufacturing a food product that he considers something superior to anything yet produced. From a point of business he must try to be fair to make it a winner. He must give the consumer something in exchange for his money, and the more the manufacturer spends in advertising, the chance is that the retailer receives the less for profit. But if the retailer sees big sales he is usually only too willing to sell the goods at a lower per cent. of profit, because the multiplied sales lead to the larger profit, and when the advertised article is of intrinsic value the customer will insist on having the goods. Does it pay to let the customer go to the other store that is more keen on business? I would answer decidedly not. A merchant must be there to please as well as to sell.

The big merchant that has built a reputation for handling goods of true merit can sell goods under any label because his trade has confidence in his judgment. He might have a fine grade of peas, something with the best flavor, and sell them at 20 per cent. He might put tomatoes under the same label and sell the tomatoes on the merit of the peas and get 30 per cent. just as easy as 20 per cent.

A merchant trying to build business in a locality where he is not known must keep advertised goods, because the people may know the advertised article, but they don't know the merchant, and just as the merchant's reputation grows for quality he can afford to sell less of advertised goods and more under his own label. Of course advertised goods have quality; the chance is the more genuine the goods the lower the margin of profit.

But my answer in short would be: The merchant who can spell merchant in large letters can drop articles that pay no retail profit, give a good substitute that will pay a profit and win out. It's all in the merchant and his power of selling.

The small merchant must sell advertised goods.

It's all in the reputation of the merchant.

While it would pay the big merchant to do one thing, it would spell failure to the little man.

Does it pay to work for nothing? No, and a thousand times no! The manufacturers are trying to advertise their goods and make the poor fool retailer pay for it. Get some good standard

By W. E. Wegman, 195 Fernwood Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

Nationally advertised goods that do not pay a reasonable profit have become quite a problem to the retailers, but from my viewpoint I don't think they should be excluded from a store entirely because the man behind the counter is a better seller than the largest circulated magazine, and if he has a Nationally advertised article on his shelf that does not give him a reasonable profit he is going to hold it back and push another.

The American public does not like to be substituted upon, and when a customer asks for a particular brand or article it does not look well to inform her you do not handle it. Then when you try to sell her another brand she immediately jumps to the conclusion that it is an inferior article. Take for instance one of our Nationally advertised coffees put up in cans that add 2 or 3 cents to the cost. Would it not be better when a customer asks for that particular brand to ask her if she ever tried such and such a coffee? It is a better coffee and costs two cents less, because you don't have to buy a can, and everyone who tries it likes it. Of course you may have the advertised brand if you wish. Such methods only apply to those who ask for advertised brands, but the majority of the people do not as a rule specify special brands, leaving it to the clerk's judgment. That is the time to sell your best article that pays you a reasonable profit.

By C. F. Brann, Des Moines, Iowa.

There is only one time when a merchant should throw out of stock Nationally advertised articles that, generally speaking, pay no profit and that is when the customer cannot go across the street or around the corner and buy the said article from a competitor, and, incidentally, transfer his account.

I do not believe there are many Nationally advertised articles that a dealer is called upon to handle on which the manufacturer does not allow the dealer a fair profit. It is true that often the per cent. of profit is not as large as the per cent. the merchant figures on for doing business, but in many cases I know this is the merchant's fault and not the manufacturer's.

Slack methods, poor management, dishonest clerks, poor judgment in allowing credits and other wasteful conditions are responsible for the high per cent. cost of doing business, and if a merchant should do business on a 20 per cent. expense and through any or all of the above faults run his expense up to 33 per cent., it is surely not the manufacturer's fault and he should not be held for the difference, although many dealers expect this.

I am also willing to give the manufacturer credit for increasing the consumption of goods, which has been done in many cases. Take beans for instance. There was a time when about the only sale on beans was the navy in bulk at 5 cents a pound, while today thousands of homes are eating beans that never thought of it before and are paying about 15 cents for a pound can.

Isn't the merchant's profit more on the 15-cent can than it was on the pound at 5 cents? Until the merchants can organize and all agree not to handle certain lines, it would practically be business suicide for one merchant to cut out goods that are so strong with the people that the manufacturer can hold up the price, for you can be sure the public will get what it wants.

Don't forget the postage stamps and car tickets. No profit in them, but they brought new customers in the store and held the old ones, and about every merchant carried them. Business can be done on a smaller margin with goods that move quick and sell themselves than with slow, "must be pushed" goods. Give them what they want or the other fellow will.

By Sigmund Weis, Sunbury, Pa.

The question as to whether or not a merchant should continue to sell advertised articles which pay little or no profit is one which every merchant no doubt has discussed freely with himself.

There is no doubt in the world that advertising in the National magazines has become a wonderful power in the marketing of a product. The magazines which have a National circulation and which are read by millions and millions of people, bring articles before the public in such a strong way that people are induced to give these articles a trial. Of course these articles must have merit or all the advertising in the world will not keep them moving, and the advertisers will have lost all the money they have spent in trying to market their product.

Here is where the merchant must use his own judgment as to what to buy and what not, because it would be useless to stock every advertised article. He must try to pick all winners, and on this a great deal of his success depends. But in my judgment a merchant should give consumers exactly what they ask for and not try to persuade them to take an article "just as good." Of course, don't mistake my meaning. There are times when every merchant is temporarily out of an article, and then it is up to him to sell something else, but if this is done repeatedly to the same customers (here is the danger) they become annoyed at it and go where they can procure exactly what they ask for.

By keeping in stock the articles which are Nationally advertised the merchant becomes associated with this advertising, which is advertising for him. His store becomes the place where these articles are looked for. The merchant should be willing to bear part of the cost of this advertising by selling them on a closer margin of profit. It is worth something to get a customer into your store, and if the handling of a few things with little or no profit will do this for you it surely is worth something. Of course a merchant could not stay in business if he handled all his merchandise on this same basis, but by getting customers into his store, through the articles which they see advertised, it is up to him to sell them other goods on which he can make a profit. And he may have gotten a number of regular customers who started coming to his store simply for articles which they saw advertised.

In closing will say that we consider Nationally advertised goods a great help to the merchant.

By Charles W. Miller, Lancaster, Pa.

In reply to question No. 2, will state that, in my opinion, all Nationally advertised articles, whether they are profitable or not, should be kept in stock as long as there is a demand for them.

I believe that business should be run in a way that everything that is sold should bear its portion of the profit that must be made to make a business successful, but as we are not living in an age of theories or beliefs, but of practice, we must meet conditions as they really are.

In every grocery store (and I judge in every other retail store) there are articles sold on which there is actually no profit realized, and which we would not handle if we could successfully not do so. But these are goods that we must have to keep our stock complete, as a customer would hardly buy the profitable goods at one store, and, because that store does not handle the profitless articles that they insist upon getting, go to another store and buy only profitless articles there.

People like to deal at the store that can supply them with everything they want in the line of goods that that store handles. There are some Nationally advertised articles for which there is a demand that are so different from anything else on the market that we are unable to get other articles to sell in their place. These articles should be handled whether profitable or not. But the big majority of Nationally advertised articles have competing brands on the market, equally as good, and as to those that pay no actual profit, my opinion is to handle them if there is a demand for them, but keep them in an inconspicuous place, always selling the other more profitable article instead of the profitless one whenever possible, but always having the profitless advertised article in stock for those who will take nothing else.

There is a Nationally advertised package coffee that is sold in this locality at about cost. I decided not to handle that coffee if possible. It was put under the counter, and whenever a customer asked for coffee we told them about our other coffees, but never about the profitless one. If they insisted on having the kind under the counter they got it, but not before they heard of the merits of the other kinds. The result was that the sale of that coffee fell off gradually until there was no more demand for it. It took about two years to do it, but it was done in so quiet a way that none of our customers seemed to notice it disappear.

I believe that the big majority of Nationally advertised brands pay a good profit, so the above opinion is only in regard to those brands that, through local conditions, or the greed of the manufacturer, must be sold for no actual profit.

The Third Contest is on the Following Subject:

3—If it should be thrown out of stock, what is the better way to do it, refuse to sell it, or keep it on hand but diplomatically avoid its sale?

Pastor Jackson's Talk to Business Men.

I had to lay over the other night in a place where I don't usually stop. A fellow I had to see couldn't see me until 7 o'clock, and after that there wasn't any train out to my next place. After I had got through with my man I asked him what there was in the place that a real gent could put in an hour or two with.

"Is there any show in town?" I asked him.

"There's the movies," he said. "Ever go to them?"

"Movies! Holy hen!" I said, "I've gone to the movies until I'm ashamed to look a movie in the face! No movies for mine to-night; I'll go to bed first."

"I'll tell you what you can take in," he said, "Pastor Smith is giving a talk to the business men of the town up to the Methodist Church to-night. You're a business man."

"I dunno about that," I said, "seeing that you put it all over me not ten minutes ago. You're the business man in this deal all right—why don't you go?"

"I am going; you come along with me."

Well, I went. This talk was one of a bunch that the pastor was putting over. He had one to the mothers and one to the married women that wasn't mothers, one to the engaged girls, one to boys under sixteen and so on through a long string of 'em. It wasn't a bad stunt; the town had sort of took it up.

This one was to all the business men of the place and pastor had hustled some to get 'em all out. There was about a hundred there, which they told me was plumb near the whole of 'em.

There ain't any use talking—I ain't as much at home in a church as I ought to be. When I walked in that night I felt myself sort of slink; I'll bet anything that if anybody saw me they sized me up for a bum burglar.

Pastor Smith was about fifty years old with a thirty horse power hand shake and a loud voice. He was chuck full of steam and he had ideas about how a business should be run that he unloaded on us in big chunks. He talked about blamed near everything, but the big point was about doing a square and honest business. Nothing new about it much.

When we left the church three of us went into an oyster parlor for a hot stew. Me, the man that took me and another customer of mine, a grocer.

"Well, Bill, what did you think of the pastor's talk?" the grocer who took me said to the other fellow. "You sell him most of his stuff, don't you?"

Bill nodded and smiled a sort of sarcastic little grin.

"Oh, it was all right," he said, "maybe the others thought more of it than I did."

"Why there wasn't anything to it but being square in business," I said. "Nothing to kick at about that."

"Sure not," said Bill, "but when you hear a man going on about being square you naturally expect him to be square too, don't you?"

"Well, ain't he?" I said.

"Depends on how you look at it," he said. "He may think he is."

"But what do you think?"

"I'll leave it to you," said Bill. "Is it square for a man to kick over your prices every time he comes in your store and try all the time to get you to sell him cheaper because he's a preacher? Is it square when a boy waits on him to reach over and give himself extra measure and then pat the boy on the back? Is it square to take ten cents, or a quarter, and maybe more, off your bills because an orange was sour, or some other stuff wasn't exactly right? Is it square to make a man wait three months for his money, when you're paid yours every month?"

"Meaning the pastor by all this?" I asked.

"You can find that out for yourself," said Bill, and as I ain't half as dumb as I look, I thought I had.

A swell lot of good the pastor's talk did Bill, his grocer, didn't it? By gum, but I do hate a crooked preacher! When I say crooked I mean doing the things Bill said. In a preacher that sort of thing's crooked, if I know anything about it, even if it wouldn't be crooked if you and me did it. I'll tell you what I've made up my mind to—if the grocer that waits on a preacher can go to his church and sit under his preaching, and get good out of it, then that's a good preacher and he can have all I've got.

Take it from me, though, there's a big swad of 'em that feel like Bill did.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market has had the lull during the week which it usually has during the holiday season. There has been a small every day demand at unchanged prices. All grades of new tea are steady.

Coffee.

The coffee market is very sick and practically all holders will sell all grades of Rio and Santos coffee at least ¼ cent below a week ago. The cause of the weakness is additional failures in Brazil, small demand in this country and general distrust of the market. In so far as options are concerned, the market is now as low as during the slump of last August and actual coffee only has ½ cent more to drop in order to be there also. Mild coffees are relatively firmer than Brazils. Java and Mocha unchanged. The general demand for coffee is from day to day.

Sugar.

The sugar market has taken a slump a little earlier than was expected. Several refiners are now selling granulated at 4 cents and the balance at 4.05 cents. This applies, however, only to sugar in barrels and bags. Package sugar at this writing is still ruling on the basis of 4.15 cents. General weakness of the raw market coupled with squabbles among refiners are responsible. The demand for refined sugar is only fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose has declined ten points during the week. Compound sryup in barrels is lower by about the same fraction, but tinned syrup has not changed. Sugar syrup and molasses quiet and unchanged.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market is still dull and weak, although some of the holders in Maryland are trying to strengthen it a little. So far, however, they haven't been very successful. The enormous pack hangs like a cloud over the market. From the packer's standpoint as well as from the standpoint of the second hands holder of 1912 tomatoes, the situation is very disheartening. Packers for the most part are selling tomatoes far below actual cost of production. Corn and peas are unchanged for the week. Apples quiet at ruling prices. California canned goods and small Eastern staple canned goods show no change and ordinary seasonable demand.

Fish.

All grades of mackerel are dull, but without any particular weakness. Some holders are still predicting higher prices after the trade gets under way in January. Cod, hake and haddock steady to firm; fair demand. Domestic sardines are firm and unchanged; demand very light. Salmon in moderate demand at ruling prices.

Dried Fruits.

There have been no changes in any line of dried fruits during the week. The demand is the usual seasonable one and prices of everything are precisely where they were a week ago.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are in fair demand with some indication of a little higher market. The Michigan primary bean market is reported to be firming up. Domestic marrows are unchanged; fairly active. Lima beans unchanged and in moderate demand. Green and Scotch peas dull and unchanged.

Butter.

The receipts of strictly fresh butter are very light and the market is firm with a good consumptive demand at one cent per pound advance over last week. Under grade creamery is also falling off and the market is about one cent higher in sympathy with the best grade. There is quite an increase in the consumption of held creameries and the market is firm at unchanged prices.

Eggs.

The consumptive demand for eggs has been very good and the receipts are still light. The market is firm at 2 cents per dozen higher than last week. Storage eggs are decreasing very rapidly and the market is firmly held at an advance of 1 to 2 cents per dozen.

Cheese.

The demand for cheese is very light and stocks are also light. No change is expected in the immediate future.

Provisions.

There is a fair seasonable demand for everything in the smoked meat line and the market is firm, with a reported light stock. There is likely to be an advance in price in the near future. Pure lard and compound is steady with a fair consumptive demand at about one-eighth of a cent decline from a week ago. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are unchanged with a very light demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Rice.

Business shows continued disposition towards a slow movement. It could scarcely be otherwise in that we are in the direct midst of the holiday period, and further because all traders are now busy with the annual inventory. The natural outcome of such a situation is for merchants to hold off and buy only to meet peremptory and immediate requirements. The supply is steadily increasing in volume, but it is mostly foreign, of which practically all arrivals continue to go into warehouse and therefore contributes no strength to the market, though it is anticipated or at least hoped that by or before the middle of January the demand will turn active and confidence be restored, so that liberal operations will be again resumed.

Advices from the South, along the Atlantic Coast, are that the demand has fallen off an item and prices are not over strong for the middle or lower grades, but the better qualities command full value. At New Orleans the movement is fairly good. Japans are more active and slightly advanced.

In the Interior—Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas—reports are that the mills are still standing off and refuse to meet the price of rough asked by the farmer. In some cases where the farmers are in need of money they are giving some of their rough to be milled on toll for their account. This is a decided indication of weakness, and unless they meet the foreign competition promptly they will have an enormous carry-over at the close of the crop season. It seems conclusive and is therefore gaining ground that prices of cleaned must advance or rough must come down. The former is untenable in face of the heavy importations of high-class Javas and Siams now offered at a very low basis.

Cables and correspondence from abroad note that a fair business has been done in rough rice; "spot cleaned" easier; "forward Burma" weak; Siam easier; Saigon neglected.

D. Talmage's Sons Co.
New York and New Orleans.

Salmon.

Since our last letter there has been very little change. More orders have been received during November this year than I think during other seasons, though the total has not been very great, still there is quite a little buying of pinks, and practically all the chums have been cleaned up.

Some of the meat packers have been heavy buyers of canned salmon, and as the price of canned meats is about 400 per cent. higher than canned pink salmon, naturally canned salmon has the call. The sixty-five-cent price on pinks means in most cases a loss to the packers which will discourage production, and also means a 10-cent selling article, which increases consumption. It is only a matter of time when these two forces working together creates an improved condition.

I think pinks will reach 75 cents about the first of March, probably 85 cents by the first of July, but the jobbers had better get some while the getting is good.

Chums, 1-pound Talls.—The pack perhaps the smallest in years.

Pinks, 1-pound Talls.—The burden of the demand for cheap salmon falls entirely on pinks, which are still selling at 65 cents. There will be a carry-over of pinks, which will probably be all consumed during the coming summer months.

Medium Reds and Cohoes.—These are attracting considerable attention, prices for talls being about 85 cents. A few flats remain at $1.10 and a fair supply of halves held for about 70 cents per dozen. Owing to the scarcity of red Alaska, many wise jobbers are stocking up on these three sizes.

Red Alaska.—These are practically all cleaned up. A few are held in California. Perhaps a few hundred cases remain here at $1.25 to $1.50 per dozen.

Blood Red Sockeyes.—Quite a large stock of these remain—mostly in the hands of packers who are holding for an expected $1.75 to $1.80 price by May or June. The talls on the spot are held at $1.45 to $1.50. A few flats remain at about $1.80, a few halves at about $1.15.

PHILIP J. BRADY.

Seattle, Wash.

Imported Fish Specialties.

There has been done only a hand-to-mouth business in salt fish during the holiday week, as is a matter of course.

Scotch Herring.—Prices remain unchanged, and there is a good hand-to-mouth demand.

Norway herring continue to sell in a regular way.

Imported Oil Sardines.—Demand continues very good. Stocks are very small, and supplies are insufficient to cover the demand. From Norway small lots of sardines are arriving all the time but not sufficient by far to supply the demand. The fishing continues to be a failure. During the last week we have received offers from several Norwegian packers at prices which are about a dollar per case higher than those which were asked about a year ago, and then these offers are all subject to catch—consequently not firm offers.

In France the fishing of sprats has not begun yet, but hopes are entertained it will soon start in.

MARKET NOTES.

Florida grapefruit ranges from $2.50 to $4 per box, which is about an average price.

Florida beans are slow around $2 to $3. There seem to be too many for the demand.

New Bermuda potatoes still range from $5 to $7 per barrel and are selling well. The quality is very fair.

Florida cucumbers are ruling high—$5 per crate; demand fair.

California cauliflower is high—$2.25 per dozen. The quality is good and the demand fair.

Radishes are coming forward in large quantities and bring $3 per 100 bunches.

In the last issue, under the new heading "These Manufacturers Will Gratuitously Send Retailers Advertising and Display Matter," appeared the following:—

P. C. Tomson Co., Philadelphia. Furnishes window and store display matter, cut-outs, signs, advertising booklets, in the interest of Banner Lye.

This was a very foolish mistake. The P. C. Tomson Co.'s brand is Red Seal Lye, and that should have been named.

THE NEW YORK LETTER.

The sugar market has indicated further demoralization in the last week. There has been more cutting of prices, and as a result all of the refiners have been quoting 4 cents on standard granulated in bags and barrels, except the American, which has not gone below 4.05 cents. The reduced prices are not attracting much business, however, as the distributors are not inclined to stock up at present. Most of them are looking for further price adjustments.

Rice is quiet and steady. The distributors are buying only to replenish supplies as required. Grocers seem to be taken care of for the immediate future.

Molasses is quiet, as usual at this time of the year. The wholesale grocers are buying only as requirements prompt them. Prices are firm on all grades. The quality of arrivals in New York is said to be better on an average than a year ago.

There is little business in canned foods of any kind in the wholesale markets. Brokers are finding little if any demand for canned vegetables. Even bargain offers have no interest for most buyers. It is believed, however, that the distributors have smaller supplies than usual on hand as a result of their cautious policy in making purchases for several months, and so brokers look for a brisk demand to show itself before spring. Prices on staples, including tomatoes, are firm. The brokers say that if there be any changes in the immediate future they will be upward.

Canned fruits, both Southern and Californian, are dull but firm There is a special scarcity of lemon cling peaches and California packed pears, which are tending upward in prices. Scarcity is also noted in Michigan peaches and Southern pears.

Conditions in the flour market are somewhat the same as they have been for some time past—not much buying at present, but a hopeful attitude and an expectation that business will soon show marked improvement. It is said that stocks in New York are only moderate.

In the died frut trade there is criticism of the policy of the raisin growers' combine in California, which is said to sell for export to Canada and other countries at prices below those maintained in this country. Spot dried prunes are dull and prices are held at least nominally up to quotations. There is nothing doing in forward shipments, following some recent transactions in large sizes. Apricots are scarce, but with little demand. The undertone of the market is firm. Dried peaches are almost neglected. Currants are quiet. There is a small jobbing demand for dates and figs.

Butter is in fair demand, with prices steady. The range in extras is from 36½ to 38 cents, according to the quality. The finer grades of firsts are crowding closer to extras. There is considerable call for passable firsts at 28 to 30 cents and there is some demand for good grades of seconds selling around 26 to 27 cents. Poorer grades of seconds are selling at 23 to 24 cents. Fine storage creamery is in moderate inquiry at 31 to 33 cents and lower grades of storage butter are also in some demand at proportionate prices. Process butter is in better demand at 23 to 25 cents for the best grades.

Fresh eggs are quiet and less firm. There is a surplus of fresh gathered eggs on the market and the offerings have a tendency to weaken prices. Pressure to sell is not very urgent, however, as a large part of the arrivals are held under shippers' directions. The range in the best grades of fresh-gathered Western and Southern eggs is from 36 to 39 cents and lower grades of fresh-gathered eggs are to be had down to 28 cents. The fancy grades of nearby eggs have a range up to 50 cents for large white hennery eggs. Storage eggs are firm, with the best grades bringing 30½ to 32 cents. The best of the foreign eggs now arriving in this city are selling at 29 to 32 cents, being classed as fresh eggs of fair to prime quality. Other grades range down to 22 cents, according to classification. Most of the held foreign eggs now arriving bring from 24 to 28 cents.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

What Does My Position as a Retail Grocery Salesman Demand?—It demands everlasting study. There is practically no limit to the knowledge that may be acquired in the modern food store. Compare your position to the man back of a dress goods counter, for instance. What is he supposed to know? Dispensing a nice line of talk in an equally nice modulated voice.

What are you supposed to know? The quality of everything from Golden Tip Ceylon to a red herring, and there are five kinds of red herring at that. "That rice looks funny," said the customer. "It isn't nearly as nice looking as that other one and you ask the same price for it." Could the clerk answer her? Not a bit of it. The one was talc coated and shiny, the other the natural product and dull.

To be sure the manager should have given his men proper instructions, but why should this particular clerk slop over in his answer when the information was there for the asking? Simply an indifferent attitude. And to the extent that this indifference prevails to the extent will your efficiency prevail.

To-morrow morning when you go back of the counter take a can of your 10-cent tomatoes and a can of your 15-cent ones—they're both the same size—why a difference in price of 50 per cent.? There is no excuse for your not knowing why, but there are a dozen reason why you should know.

If I go into your store to buy a barrel of flour and there is a difference of 75 cents in the two brands you quote me, more than likely I'll be inclined to pay the difference. But you're told to push the cheaper one because there's an extra profit of 25 cents in for the firm. Argument, please?

Well, sir, the economical value of flour is represented by the amount of liquid that it is capable of absorbing. I can prove to you that both these flours are equal in quality—that is in texture, "spring," strength, etc., therefore both will give you practically the same results in the oven. If you choose to pay 75 cents for popularity, that is up to you, sir. I have given you a truthful statement.

Rice and flour and tomatoes are merely drops in the bucket. Make everything you handle all day long give up its secret—its whys and wherefores. Apart entirely from such knowledge being an aid in selling it becomes a mental stimulant, making you a broader thinker—a veritable seeker after truth.

Let us add importance to our vocation. Converting hum-drum, lazy like mechanical work into an art and a science so as to be ready some day to sit at a desk that demands "knowing."

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

There never was a better opportunity offered the merchants of the State to organize than is presented them at the present time. The services of an experienced organizer is at the command of the business men in any town for the asking. The only necessary thing for the merchant to do is to arrange to get together, fix the time of the meeting (after consultation with the organizer) and then have Mr. Smedley do the rest.

Every merchant believes in organization. Many are anxious for it, but appear indifferent to taking the first step. Now the first step is to talk the matter over with your fellow merchants and get them to agree to take part in the meeting. Then arrange to fix the date and engage a place to meet. Then extend a general invitation to every merchant to be present.

An association of merchants in any town is a good thing. Trade evils can be eliminated; credits can be regulated; a better and more fraternal feeling can be created; the town or city can be benefited. These and many other accomplishments are possible through organization. In these days of modern merchandising we are beginning to understand that competition and co-operation go hand in hand.

Now! here's the thought: Get together. Of course you want an organization. Well, just take it upon yourself, Mr. Merchant, to take the first step. It's up to you, at this the commencement of a new year. Be the pioneer.

If you are not fully acquainted with the Pennsylvania plan, drop us a postal and we will mail you full particulars.

The Pennsylvania plan is doing wonders as an incentive to organization. It's a real help to the merchant. It is providing the means to carry the work and word of organization into new fields. It is a strengthener of present organization. It has been the incentive to large additions to the membership rolls of many local associations. Now help the good work along by stocking, displaying and pushing the sale of the goods in the plan.

Here's a list of manufacturers who believe in you and who want your co-operation and good will. The benefits to your association are worthy of your best effort:—

L. H. Parke & Co., teas, coffees and spices; Franklin Sugar Refining Co., carton sugar; Borden's Condensed Milk Co., condensed milk; H. O. Wilbur & Sons, cocoa and chocolate; Freihofer Baking Co., macaroni, spaghetti and noodles; Chas. W. Young & Co.,

It is imperative that the merchants organize. Do you want the mercantile tax law repealed? Organize. Do you want a garnishee law? Organize. Legislation can only be secured by presenting a solid front. Organize.

Merchants who are organized are reaping the benefits of better conditions, better profits and better foods. Organization is a help to an awakening of an intelligent self-interest. Organize.

Organization produces goodfellowship. It's worth something to be able to meet your neighbor in a friendly fashion. Organization means self-protection. This is an age of progress. An organization of merchants is a step forward.

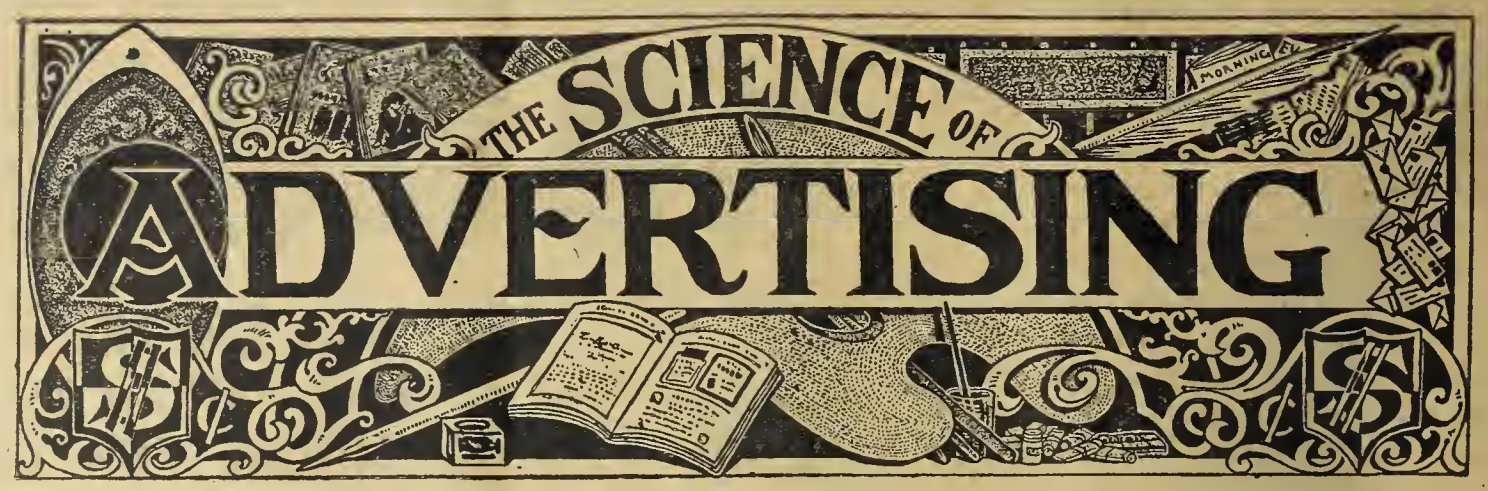
1914 Calendars Received.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" acknowledges the receipt of several very handsome calendars from various manufacturing concerns. Perhaps the most elaborate were from the International Harvester Co., illustrating in unusually handsome pictures scenes from the early settlement of the country, and suggesting the influence which the various farm implements made by the International Co. had upon National development.

Handsome calendars have also been received from Libby, McNeill & Libby. These present child pictures which show some of the finest color printing which has ever reached this office.

Florida oranges are coming right along, and appear to be wanted. The range for good sound fruit is $2 to $4.50.



The Manning Grocery Co., Manning, S. C., send in a number of the circulars which they used during the Christmas holidays. They are all 6 x 13 inches in size, and printed some on red and some on green paper. The quality is not as good as it might be, therefore the printing doesn't show up as well as it might, although it is still good printing—up-to-date type in good condition, combined with taste. This is what I consider the best of the circulars sent me.

Outside of that part of the advertisement exploiting Whitman's candies, this is of course merely a general announcement of Christmas goods. It may perform a certain service as a general announcement, but personally I believe in as little general advertising as possible. It almost never does any tangible good, and while specific advertising will do everything that the general advertising will and get traceable results beside. Very likely the Manning Grocery Co. followed this up with other advertising of a more specific character.

Using as a test something which appears in this circular, a splendidly effective advertisement ought to have been possible to the Manning Co. on some such subject as "New Christmas Things Nowhere But Here." This would be a development of the statement —"getting there first with things that are new and nobby." I can imagine nothing that ought to pull better than a statement, if true, that the store contained a large number of exclusive things that could be seen nowhere else, telling what they were and describing them. As an advertising man, I should consider that if I had a talking point like that I could almost guarantee results.

CCXL.—More About the Stopping of Price-cutting.

No article in this entire series, I think, has attracted more attention and aroused more comment—some of it very adverse—than the article preceding this one, on "Is This Restraint of Trade?" in which I discussed plans for preventing the cutting of prices. All of the adverse comment appears to be from manufacturers whose products are more or less cut in the open market, and who deny that there is anything which will enable them to stop it. With most of my conclusions that price-cutting, within certain limitations, can be stopped or at least lessened, these manufacturers do not agree at all. Here I insert extracts from a letter written by one of the largest pencil manufacturers in the world, which shows the trend of unfavorable opinion, when it is unfavorable:—

> We think if retailers were to follow the suggestion made by your attorney and get together in an organization and vote to discontinue handling the products of a manufacturer, such organization would soon find themselves in very hot water, for it would be a very easy matter to proceed against any such organization under our present conspiracy laws. Further, in the last paragraph of the article, your attorney states that the manufacturer whose sales were thus cut off would find a legal and effective way to cut off a cutter's supplies.
> Now I want to state most emphatically that manufacturers have been trying for years to find a legal and effective way to cut off a cutter's supplies, and they have never yet found such a way, and under the present decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and the further provisions of our conspiracy laws, there is no way to prevent a retailer from cutting prices whether the goods are patented or copyrighted or trade marked makes no difference, and your attorney must very well know it.
> A manufacturer can refuse to sell any one for any reason or for no reason. He is not compelled to give a reason, but the closing of an account by a manufacturer does not prevent the cutting dealer from obtaining supplies in the open market, and your correspondent must have known it when he wrote this article. We have been paying lawyers large fees for years to find a legal method to prevent the cutting of prices on our goods, and our difficulties seem greater to-day than they were fifteen to eighteen years ago.
> Yours very truly,
> L. & C. HARDTMUTH,
> I. P. Favor,
> Manager for North America.

In what I am about to say now I want it to be clearly understood that I mean no particular manufacturer or manufacturers, and have no one in mind. There is a type of manufacturer who without doubt is taking refuge to-day behind the plea: "I would stop price-cutting on my goods if I could, but I am prevented by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court." There are manufacturers who do not wish to keep their goods out of price-cutters' hands, or have them kept out, because they will thereby lose distribution. Neither do they feel they can afford to stand voluntarily before the regular trade as conniving with the price-cutter, so they compromise by pleading that they do not believe in price-cutting, and would cut off the cutter if they could, but if they did they would be violating the law.

Now in many cases these manufacturers are wrong. Sometimes they know they are wrong, sometimes they are innocently wrong. In many cases I believe that it lies easily within the power of these manufacturers to lessen the cutting of their products, if they sincerely wish to do it, and are willing to lose a little business if necessary.

Following out a little more in detail the ideas advanced in the last article, I present now a plan which in my judgment would at least greatly lessen price-cutting on proprietary products; which would, furthermore, if my opinion is worth anything, be absolutely legal from beginning to end, and, if I correctly read the court decisions upon trade restraints, would not conflict with them at any point. So far as I have seen, this plan has never been tried; certainly it has not appeared in any of the cases which have come before the appeal courts:—

We start from the principle which everybody admits, that any seller of goods, manufacturer, jobber or retailer—other than a public service corporation—can sell, or refuse to sell, or sell on condition. We will use as the basis of the illustration an article sold by a manufacturer (A) to a jobber (B), and by the jobber to the retailer (C). The problem is to keep the price uniform both in the jobber's and the retailer's hands.

There is not the slightest doubt that A can control B's reselling price by making resale at a certain price a condition of his sale to B. A can refuse to sell B unless B agrees to resell only at a certain figure. If B gets the goods on that condition and breaks it, A can cut him off and sue him for breach of contract. I know of no decision which has even implied a doubt that A could legally introduce such a provision in his own selling contract with B, and that he could compel B to obey it.

So far, nobody, I believe, will disagree with me. Keeping C, the retailer, from cutting the price is to A a totally different proposition. The decisions are now pretty nearly uniform that A has nothing to do with C in such a case because he had no contract relations with C—did not sell him, in other words, and when C breaks the price he breaks no contract of any sort with A, and A can therefore do nothing. So far as I have seen, A has never tried to get around this by compelling B to make a price-maintaining contract with C, which appears to me to be the precise thing to do. B, remember, is the jobber, and he has the same right to refuse to sell C, or sell him on condition, that A has to sell B in that way. Therefore, if B agreed to sell C only on condition that C would resell at a certain price, I know of no reason to prevent B—not A, understand—from enforcing it if C attempted to disregard it. The trouble in the past has been that A has attempted to go after C himself, which as I have before explained, he could not do. The only person who can go after C is B, who has contract relations with him.

How can B, the jobber, be persuaded to exact such a contract from C, the retailer? A could persuade him to do it very easily by making the obtaining of such a contract another condition of his willingness to sell B. In a nutshell, the plan can be stated thus in a suppositious letter from A to B:—

> I hereby agree to accept your order for .....upon the following conditions:—
> 1. (Price and terms.)
> 2. You are not to resell the goods referred to to any one for less than .....
> 3. You are to obtain from every retail dealer to whom you sell said goods a written agreement between yourself and him (we will supply blanks) by which you agree to sell him only upon condition that he shall not resell said goods to any person for less than .....
> 4. You are to decline to sell our products at any price to any person whose name we deliver to you while you have said products in stock, the purpose of this clause being to keep said products out of the hands of price cutters as far as possible.

If there is any plan by which B, having signed this contract, can avoid having it enforced against him if he violates it; and any reason under which B, having taken a similar contract with C, would be prevented from enforcing it against C if necessary, I do not know what it is. The only conceivable reason would be that the contracts were illegal and unenforceable because in restraint of trade. That contention would not last a minute, because a seller can restrain trade in his own goods to any extent he likes, provided he still holds legal control over them or the sellers of them.

Another Anti-Trading Stamp Law Knocked Out.

The Nebraska Supreme Court in two opinions handed down during the week declared the so-called "anti-loan shark law" and the gift enterprise statute unconstitutional and void. The laws were passed by the Legislature of 1913 and 1911 respectively. The "anti-loan shark law," which had as its purpose the wiping out of the business of loaning money on wages and certain kinds of chattels at a rate of interest classed as excessive, was held by the court to be special legislation. The gift enterprise law, by which the Legislature sought to make it a crime for one to engage in such enterprises as gifts for trading stamps, was held to be "an unreasonable interference with lawful business" and in conflict with the Federal Constitution.

A Sample in Every Home

Every year we aim to put a sample package of

in every home in the United States and Canada. Quite often someone asks, "Why do you sample Shredded Wheat?"

We conduct extensive sampling campaigns because it is an effective way of educating consumers regarding the peculiar form, uses and nutritive value of Shredded Wheat. It is sampled from our own automobiles, by our own men, in a way that reaches the housewife and makes a convincing impression upon her. We follow this up with extensive newspaper and magazine advertising. In return for these efforts to create business for you we ask your interest and co-operation.

Shredded Wheat is packed in neat, substantial wooden cases. The empty cases are sold by enterprising grocers for 10 or 15 cents each, thereby adding to their profits on Shredded Wheat.

Olive Oil Display.

This is a good time to make a display of olive oil. Every grocery store sells some, and if you handle some that you can guarantee as pure, to your customers, make a display of the different size bottles. Also grape juice at the same time. To arrange, first cover the bottom of the window with purple crepe paper. In the centre in front place a neat sign card, with lettering as in illustration. Cover two or three square pieces of board with the purple crepe paper—three boards if you have four different size bottles—and arrange them in a pyramid, as in the cut. Finish at the sides with twisted strips of yellow crepe paper. From the corners in the rear to the centre arrange the different size bottles of grape juice. Make an arch in the rear of wire, supporting it from the ceiling with invisible wire. Cut some yellow crepe paper in long strips about two inches wide. Tack them to the ceiling at the rear, twist and fasten to the wire arch. This done, twist a strip around the wire arch. Suspend a long, narrow card with lettering like in cut.

Pancake Flour.

Pancake flour is always a good article to move along. But increase your sales by having a window display of it. The illustration is a neat one and very easily arranged. First cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. In the centre in front place a sign card with lettering as in illustration. At each side place two cakes of honey in the combs and some drained honey in bottles. In the centre place a linen napkin, on which place an opened bag of self-raising buckwheat flour, a bowl with some flour and a can of unsweetened milk. At each side place a small pyramid of syrup in cans. In the centre at the rear make a pyramid of small sacks of the self-raising buckwheat flour and finish with twisted strips of bright red crepe paper. Build a pyramid at each side with pancake flour. Make the background as described in the other article, but instead of yellow crepe paper use bright red. Suspend a sign with the words, "Hot Cakes."

Christmas Cheer for Employees of W. J. Dawes & Co.

On the Wednesday before Christmas a meeting of all the employees of W. J. Dawes & Co., general distributors of Mother's Cleanser, etc., took place at the executive offices of the concern on the eleventh floor of the World's Tower Building, 110, 112 West Fortieth street, New York City. Mr. Dawes started the Christmas cheer by sending several boxes of cigars into the sales department and then presented every employee with a five dollar gold piece and a word of appreciation for their work.

The salesmen then listened to a few addresses designed to encourage them in their efforts and instruct them in their work. The feature talks of the afternoon were by Mr. Arthur H. Paterson, formerly sales manager for Sulzberger & Sons, and Mr. Charles W. Hoyt, who was formerly sales manager for Armour & Co., and who now conducts The Charles W. Hoyt Advertising Agency of New Haven, New York and Boston. Mr. Hoyt's speech particularly was well received, and before he had finished there was quite as much enthusiasm in his audience as has even been aroused by even Billy Sunday. The meeting closed with an interchange of the season's greetings and everybody left with at least the foundation for a happy Christmas.—Adv.

Nominally, But Not Actually, Pennsylvania Commodities Act Became Operative January 1st

No Penalty Can be Imposed for Violation as to Products Prepared or Imported Before January 1st, 1915. Many Concerns, However, Arrange to Conform With Law Now. Text of Act and a Summary of Its Provisions.

Nominally the new Pennsylvania law known as the Commodities Act went into effect January 1, 1914, but actually it will not become operative until about January 1, 1915, or later. This is because of Section 10, which provides that "this act shall go into effect the first day of January, 1914, provided, however, that no penalty shall be enforced for any violation of its provisions as to domestic products prepared, or foreign products imported, prior to eighteen months after its passage." The act was passed about the middle of 1913 and eighteen months after its passage means January 1, 1915. The act is thus made inoperative as to domestic products prepared before January 1, 1915, or foreign products imported before that time. This really means that the act may not become generally effective even by January 1, 1915, for all domestic or foreign products prepared or imported before that date are exempt, even though they may not actually be sold until long after that.

The act, however, is a good law, and might as well be obeyed now as later, so that wise concerns are arranging their affairs to conform with it now. The full text of the act is as follows:—

AN ACT

Defining commodities, regulating the sale thereof and providing penalties for violation hereof.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That the word "commodity," as used in this act, shall be taken to mean any tangible personal property sold or offered for sale.

Sec. 2. All liquid commodities, when sold in bulk or from bulk, shall be sold by weight or liquid measure. All dry commodities, when sold in bulk or from bulk, shall be sold by weight, dry measure or numerical count. No dry commodities shall be sold by liquid measure. Dry commodities in carload lots may be sold by weight.

Sec. 3. It shall be unlawful to use a measure without a bottom in selling any commodity.

Sec. 4. It shall be unlawful in selling any commodity to use any measure unless the same shall have thereon marked in distinct letters and figures the capacity thereof. If such measure be of the capacity of one-half bushel or less, or of one-half-gallon or less, it shall be marked in terms of a quart, dry or liquid measure, respectively. If the measure be of the capacity of over one-half bushel or one-half gallon, it shall be marked in terms of a bushel or gallon, respectively.

Sec. 5. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation, with intent to defraud:—

(1) To sell or offer for sale any commodity on the container of which is marked any false statement respecting the kind, number, quantity, weight or measure of such commodity, or of any part thereof respecting the place or county where such commodity was manufactured or produced, or respecting the quality or grade of such commodity.

(2) To orally or otherwise represent that any commodity offered for sale in bulk to which no name or trade mark shall be attached is the manufacture or production of some other than the actual manufacturer or producer; provided, that nothing in this act is to be constructed as applying to drugs, medicines, chemicals or pharmaceutical or proprietary preparations used as medicine, nor to toilet preparations.

Authorities Somewhat Modify Ruling Excluding Foreign Potatoes.

Issue New Ruling Allowing Them to Enter if Certified to be Free from Disease. Old Order Required Permits Before Potatoes Could be Brought In.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

Washington, D. C.,
January 9, 1914.

To permit the admission of disease-free potatoes from foreign countries and districts which are not infected by the powdery scab, wart and other serious diseases, the Secretary of Agriculture has issued a series of regulations defining the conditions under which potatoes will be permitted to enter this country. The recent order of December 22, 1913, extended to potatoes the nursery stock regulations of the Plant Quarantine Act and provided that no potatoes could be imported until the importers had secured permits from the Federal Horticultural Board, similar to those now issued to importers of nursery stock. This is now modified, in order to admit some foreign potatoes, at least, in competition with the high-priced domestic.

Potatoes to be admitted must be certified by the Government of the country of origin to be free from dangerous diseases and insect pests covered by the quarantine, and must have been grown in a district free from the wart disease and the powdery scab.

The regulations, in general, besides prescribing the exact forms of notifying the Government of shipments, provide for the admission, under the inspection system, of potatoes from all countries not under quarantine. Such countries must, however, maintain effective quarantines of their own against infected countries, i. e., countries remaining under quarantine by the United States.

The regulations also provide for the lifting of the quarantine as to any countries covered by the quarantine upon the presentation of satisfactory evidence to the Secretary of Agriculture that such country, or well-defined district thereof, is free from injurious potato diseases and insect pests, and, after the quarantine has been thus lifted, potatoes will be admitted from such country or district in accordance with the regulations governing entry of potatoes from countries not now under quarantine. The countries now quarantined are Newfoundland, the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, Great Britain, including England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland; Continental Europe, and the Dominion of Canada. It is expected that from some of these at least it will be possible in the near future to lift the quarantine and permit the entry of potatoes therefrom under the conditions prescribed in the regulations. HOLT.

Discussion of Conditions Surrounding Butter and Egg Market. Alleged Scheme to Bear Porto Rico Sugar Market. More Talk of Public Markets. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

New York, N. Y.,
January 8, 1914.

Conditions in the butter and egg market were treated at length at the annual meeting held Tuesday evening by the New York Mercantile Exchange. President J. Mahr, who is now entering upon his sixth term as the chief officer of the exchange, spoke in his annual address of a number of topics that have been a cause of worry and annoyance in the trade in the last year.

One of these subjects was that of claims on railroads for damage by breakage. He declared that the new rules of the Trunk Line Association had been the cause of much trouble and had been enforced in a way that has proved unjust to shippers and merchants, especially as to the adjustment of back claims. He said that the action of the railroads, in trying to make use of new rules to block the proper adjustment of claims and transactions, dating before the adoption and publication of such rules was manifestly unfair. He advised the members to resist such rules as to back claims in the courts and expressed the opinion strongly that the courts will not uphold the roads in their course.

A special committee of the exchange has been conferring with the officers of the Trunk Lines as to various new rules. The committee has obtained an injunction against certain roads, prohibiting them from enforcing certain rules that would have interfered with the adjustment of claims on the docks.

In relation to the activity of the local Board of Health, Mr. Mahr said that the members desire to co-operate with the authorities in enforcing all regulations that are reasonable and for the public interest. Some of the inspectors he said have been most unreasonable and exacting in making complaints against members of the association who have been put to much trouble and expense as a consequence, but fortunately the local magistrates before whom cases were brought have usually taken a broad and liberal view and the unreasonable complaints have been dismissed.

Last Friday the advertising campaign which we promised the grocers who stocked our goods began. Next week, the week after, next month, the month after, and weeks and months for years to come, the most powerful and effective advertising mediums, first in the East and then over the entire country, will continue to drive home to the buyers of Kitchen Products the merits and superior features of Mother's Cleanser and the rest of the entire list of Dawes Products.

The same kind of advertising campaign which we have just begun has created the demand for many other grocery specialties and will create the demand for ours. Mr. Mahr said that the trade, in common with other lines of business, has been made the target of some unfavorable legislation in the last year but has adjusted itself to the new conditions as well as possible.

The association adopted a resolution against the Federal cold storage bill now pending in Congress as "H. R. 9,530."

J. A. Babcock was elected secretary. F. S. Henry was reappointed superintendent. Committees were appointed on eggs, cheese, butter and on various departments of the work of the exchange. Arrangements were made to improve methods of inspection in several respects.

A local assistant United States Attorney is investigating charges that sugar refiners in this city have conspired to depress the price of Porto Rico sugar. It is charged that they are trying now to keep down the price to a parity with the lower price at which Cuban sugar is expected to sell after March 1st, when the duty on Cuban sugar will be reduced about 33 cents per hundred pounds on standard grades. The sugar from Porto Rico is free of duty.

Complaint of the alleged conspiracy was made by Governor General Yeager, of Porto Rico, to the Department of Justice. He said that the refiners are trying to get the benefit of a month's margin in the lower prices.

It is generally believed here in the trade that the investigation is not likely to result in any prosecutions. The department will make a vigorous effort, however, to learn if the refiners have agreed upon any such scheme as is charged.

Further progress in the project for a big system of public markets was made this week when the city commission appointed by the late Mayor Gaynor submitted a report in which a committee of twenty-one leading professional and business men joined.

The commission recommends four big markets, one in each of the city boroughs, on sites upon which the commission has agreed. The idea is to make these wholesale markets and to make them, to as great an extent as possible, freight terminals of railroad and steamship lines.

Another recommendation is for the creation of a department of markets to have general charge of the distribution of food throughout the city. The commission, in its report, emphasizes the need of this city to bring about conditions that will mean the prompt distribution of food products after they are received here.

One suggestion was that the public should be educated to buy more largely the food products that are in season, which would tend to lower the cost of living.

Some of the department and chain-stores are cutting prices a little on sugar because of the lower wholesale price of 4 cents a pound at the refineries for standard granulated. The margin is so small that most grocers have not changed their prices.

There is some discussion in the trade as to whether or not the retail price is to be generally forced down by the big crops of raw sugar and the tariff changes. Both wholesaler and retailer handle sugar on the closest margins, but of course they may pass on to the consumers the benefit of the reductions that take place.

It is pointed out, however, that cheaper sugar may stimulate consumption by consumers and manufacturers of various food products and so the increased demand may have its effect in preventing too much reduction of prices.

In his "food" articles in the "Globe," A. W. McCann is now charging that the Chicago packers are already preparing to raise a false alarm of bubonic plague as an excuse for shutting out Argentine beef from this country. He says that this alarm is to be raised only in case the packers fail in efforts which they are now making to get control of the Argentine meat trade.

Mr. McCann says that it will be easy for the packers to get "experts" who will say that there is danger from the importation of meat from Argentiné and that the packers' "pull" in the Federal Department of Agriculture will then be sufficient to bring about a quarantine which will shut out all meat from the South American country.

It is charged that a number of hold over officials in the Department of Agriculture will readily lend themselves to the scheme, as they are of the old type of officials who were and are subservient to various kinds of corporations.

This class of officials, it is charged, are responsible for the present quarántine on potatoes, because of which prices are double what they would otherwise be—so it is said.

If active steps are taken for a quarantine of Argentine meat, the independent dealers propose to ask President Wilson to have a thorough investigation by persons outside the influence of the Department of Agriculture.

Peddlers in various parts of the city are making use of a new scheme to get business, especially in teas, coffee, butter and eggs. They go from door to door and tell the housewives that because of the removal of duties by the new tariff law these products can now be sold much cheaper than formerly. This is the argument made even as to products that were free of duty under the old law. The peddlers then say that the regular retail grocers are charging the old prices and not giving their customers the benefit of the lower prices made possible by the removal of duties.

So, the peddlers say, they are going about in order to give people the benefit of the new law and the lower prices.

The peddlers pose as representatives of wholesale houses, but generally mention no names. The fellows are glib talkers and tell the housewives a lot about the tariff laws and the customs, with facts and figures of all kinds, but mostly wrong. In fact, they say anything to make a sale.

For instance, if the housewife has been paying 50 cents a pound for tea, they will assure her that they have exactly the same kind of tea for 35 or 40 cents.

Naturally the housewife has heard about a new tariff law but knows little or nothing as to the particulars of the changes that are made. So in many instances the peddlers find it easy to impress and deceive the women—and sometimes men, too—with their talk and figures.

Some of the peddlers go about with wagons, making delivery as they sell. Others merely take orders and deliveries are made later from addresses in the wholesale district.

So many grocers are getting questions from customers these days about the changes and the supposed changes in the tariff on food products and find that it pays them to keep posted on just what changes have been made so as to show the false character of various claims made by the peddlers.

Of course the cheaper article sold by the peddlers are of inferior character. The tariff law is simply the bait by which they get customers. Most of their activity is in the sale of teas and coffees, in which there is plenty of opportunity for deception.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Spot coffee is in better inquiry from the country and prices on Brazils are firmer in tone. The sentiment has been improved considerably by the recovery in options. The smaller receipts at primary points have also been a factor in increasing confidence in the trade. Mild grades of coffee are more active in spot and forward shipment, with prices well maintained, as spot supplies are moderate.

A better inquiry for teas is noted and this is evidently due to the needs of the country distributors to replenish supplies. The buying is mostly in small lots, however, with no large purchases reported. Warehouse stocks of all kinds are said to be moderate

1913 an Uneasy Year for Canned Goods

Year's Compilation Shows Many Advances and Declines, With No Line Stationary for the Year. Most Fluctuations Large.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" presents below the usual compilation of figures showing the course of canned goods prices during 1913. This journal has published this compilation for about ten years, being furnished with it by Thomas J. Meehan & Co., Baltimore, Md. The quotations represent Maryland standard canned goods.

All canned goods have been more or less uneasy during the year. Pineapple has advanced, tomatoes have declined, peas have declined, spinach has declined, sauer kraut has advanced, oysters have advanced, strawberries and raspberries have advanced, lima beans have declined, baked beans have declined, string beans have advanced, pears and apples have advanced, corn has advanced, peaches have advanced. Most of these fluctuations have been large. The greatest slumps were in peas and tomatoes; the greatest advance was in corn:—

Keep Pace with the Advertising of the Goods You Sell

MERCHANDISING success, in any line, depends upon right goods and a thorough selling knowledge of those goods.

The first essential, right goods, is easy enough to establish in your store; every branch of manufacture is represented by one or more trade marked, advertised products of Class A quality, and the manufacturers will meet you more than half way.

The second essential, selling knowledge of the goods, is as easily attained—simply read up, study, keep pace with all advertising of products sold in your store.

National Biscuit Company products are right. N. B. C. advertising is world-famous. The In-er-seal Trade Mark packages and the glass front cans are familiar everywhere.

N. B. C. products will keep you facing successward—N. B. C. advertising will sell goods for you if you will give it a chance.

WITH THE EDITOR

The Question of Raising Freight Rates.

There is much apparent reason in the request of the railroads to the Interstate Commerce Commission that they be allowed to increase freight rates 5 per cent. Upon the face of it their story is strong and convincing. They say that for years their expenses have been steadily increasing because of higher wages, the operation of various restrictive laws, the public demand for more and better facilities, and the consistent increase in the price of all raw materials. In spite of these increases, the railroads have been denied the right to get any of this money back by raising their own rates.

Now if this is true, as it is stated—and if their profit was only fair before—the railroads ought to have their increase. But is it true? The chance is that the railroads are really paying out the moneys they say they are, but could not the amount of those moneys be reduced? There are no short cuts to results in railroad offices. Red tape is enormously expensive. The writer read a story recently of a small station master in a New England town who asked his road's permission to buy a pane of glass at a local hardware store and put it in a broken window in his waiting room. The railroad refused—the requisition must take its usual course, and it did. By the time the glass was put in, the transaction had consumed several weeks and $8.75, whereas the station master could have bought the glass and put it in in an hour for 75 cents.

If all the railroads' transactions follow anything like this course, one can easily see why their expenses are so high. Possibly the introduction of scientific efficiency would cut down these expenses and make an advance in freight rates unnecessary. This should be looked into before the rates are raised.

One other thing: The people don't believe what the railroads say. They have been so mixed up with politics, and lobbying, and grafting and bribery, that they are looked on as shady corporations. Where it comes to raising rates, the people are from Missouri.

A Jobbers' Service Department.

The way to get business nowadays seems to be to render service, which in a sense is a premium given with the regular business of selling. The retailer renders this to his customer when he delivers his goods, the manufacturer renders it to his customer, the jobber, when he sends out men to solicit retailers' orders to be filled through the jobber, and there are very many more ways of rendering it. One way is told in the following statement sent to this journal by the National Credit Men's Association:—

> A credit man in the northern part of New York State recently called on a customer in a nearby city, more for the purpose of making an acquaintance than for direct business reasons, and casually made the remark that if in taking his inventory everything were not clear and did not turn out as expected, he would be glad to make a special trip for the purpose of going into the question with him. A few months thereafter came a statement and copy of a trial balance, evidently not made by one familiar with accounting, according to which the customer seemed to have cleared about $300, it being his first year in business. The customer remarked that there had been some points he did not understand, and as promised, the credit man took a train to the customer's city, went over his books and discovered that instead of being $300 to the good, he had run $200 behind during the year. Analyzing the situation, it was found that too much money was being spent in daily newspaper advertising, which, so far as could be ascertained, was bringing no results. It was recommended that this be cut out entirely, or at least that advertisements be inserted only in times of special sale. Again, the insurance was found to be about $2,000 less than it should be, and recommendation was made for its increase. Other minor items were also brought out, as it seemed for the good of the business, the principal one being not to buy heavily, but to restrict buying to immediate needs, carefully scattering purchases so that there would be small monthly accounts accruing.
> Inasmuch as the statement showed for the first year sound conditions, with excellent prospects, recommendation was made that a loan from a local bank be secured in order to discount bills.
> The customer made it clear that he was appreciative of the attention given him by acknowledging courtesies in a cordial letter and by showing his friendly feeling further in increasing the volume of business to the house and keeping in close confidential touch with it.

The jobber who will establish a "service department," to help his customers wherever and whenever they need help, to improve their bookkeeping, to help them properly compute costs and profits, to eliminate all sorts of waste, to give them ideas on the successful conduct of business—will find it the most splendidly remunerative investment he has ever made. The writer is as firmly convinced of that as he is that day will follow night.

As to Dishonest Grocery Failures.

In a recent issue an article appeared in the Legal Department discussing the large number of fraudulent failures that were put over because creditors as a class were usually glad to take a bankrupt's first offer, and seldom favored opening cases up, no matter how bad they smelt. This because opening up cases would mean worrisome and expensive litigation. That it would very often pay, however, to go to the bottom of a failure that looks suspicious, is shown by the following information, which is furnished the "Grocery World and General Merchant" by the National Credit Men's Association:—

> In August, 1912, John C. Carter, retail grocer and provision dealer of Newport, R. I., disposed of all his business assets at ridiculously low prices; withdrew all funds which he had on deposit in one of the commercial banks, as well as his deposit in a savings bank, collected all accounts as closely as possible and departed for California, leaving his creditors to mourn.
> His debts amounted approximately to $3,500, and assets which the trustee in bankruptcy accumulated totaled only $200. The creditors all advanced 10 per cent. of their claims to pay the expense of conducting an investigation, with the result that Carter was brought back to Newport, and, at a trial held in the Federal Court at Providence last month, was given a sentence of three months in the Newport county jail. In imposing sentence the judge stated that he found mitigating circumstances, one of which was that Carter had paid a considerable sum of money during the month of August, 1912, the last month he was in Newport, thus indicating that while a crime had been committed, it had not long been preconceived.

It does not appear that the creditors got any more money by bringing Carter back, but they had the satisfaction which is often better than money, of putting an unrepentant thief in prison. Every man owes his fellows a moral duty to do this, in order that they may not be defrauded as he was. Carter in California, unpursued and unprosecuted, is one man. Carter, jail bird, with a criminal record, is another. The first Carter could do ten times the damage that the second could.

Suspicion.

Here is an extract from an article which appeared in last Sunday's Philadelphia "Ledger" on the ever interesting high cost of living:—

> I solved the high cost of living by marrying a grocery clerk who worked fourteen hours a day for $15 per week. My husband's knowledge of the cost of high living and the tricks of the grocery trade have been the means of solving our problems in the increase in the cost of living. There's a great difference between the cost of high living and the high cost of living. The two Warning!

All subscribers to the "Grocery World and General Merchant," and the retail trade generally, are warned to do no business whatever, on this journal's behalf, with one Bert Doty, whose address is or was No. 321 Locos Street, Butler, Pa. Doty was at one time in the "Grocery World and General Merchant's" employ, but was discharged because he did not turn over money which he had collected; also because subscribers complained that he had collected money for them and had made no returns.

are confused by most housekeepers and it was the experience of my husband that enabled me to separate the two and keep our grocery and meat bill down to $4 a week. We have four in our family, a son, seven; a daughter, three; my husband and self.

During my first experience at housekeeping it was provoking to have my husband tell me of some of his customers with larger families whose household expenses were less than ours. By a good deal of questioning and by degrees I soon found why some housekeepers spend $10 with the grocer and butcher each week and others only $4. The watch dog for every kitchen is a set of family scales; the best protector against short weights. Don't run a grocery bill if you can possibly pay cash—you will be surprised to see the difference it makes in the amount you buy. Don't let the grocery clerk call more than three times a week—twice is better if your family is small and your memory good. Don't use charcoal for fuel; any grocery clerk will tell you that the housewife who buys charcoal every day is the one who has large bills and is considered an "easy" one by all shopkeepers. Don't buy an yeast cake unless you expect to use it immediately. Determine by experience whether you can do without ice before purchasing an ice box. For two years now I have used no ice, having learned that by careful management I can do without ice by using the cellar, keeping close watch of all provisions and meat, purchasing in only such quantities as I can use without spoiling. Keep a few chickens if posible, enough of them to eat the garbage. Don't let the merchant do your ordering for you—you know better than he what your needs are and the size of your pocketbook. Don't allow flattery to rob the contents of your pocketbook, the smooth-tongued grocery clerk knows how to sell the specialties that you can do without. We have meat but once a day, buying only the cheaper cuts—pot roasts, beef and lamb stews, chopped meat, occasionally sausage and corn beef; seldom ever steak or legs of lamb. I seldom buy baker's bread and never any of the ready-cooked cereals, though we have cereals and toast every morning for breakfast. We live in a suburban town where we keep a pig and raise our own vegetables, apples and small fruit, and sell some of our surplus to friends. The $4 includes only such groceries and meat as are bought at the store. We get our milk for 5 cents a quart and my husband eats bread and milk for supper 365 days in a year—I pay for the milk out of what I receive for eggs, having the remainder for pin money. Every Sunday we have a chicken from the home poultry yard. Last, but not the least, do not get on the grocer's "easy" list. If he discovers that you are good natured and accept anything he offers, your kitchen will soon be the dumping ground for unsalable goods.

Observe the general tone of suspicion. "The tricks of the grocery trade." "Don't let flattery rob the contents of your pocket book." "The smooth-tongued grocery clerk." "If he (the grocer) discovers that you are good-natured and accept anything he offers, your kitchen will soon be the dumping ground for unsalable goods." All these expressions make the grocer appear a sharp trickster who will take advantage of you if he can; a person to be kept at arm's length and watched.

Is this feeling at all general? The writer is much afraid it is becoming so, aided by reckless newspapers who love to array the consumer against "oppressors," and then take his part. How can it be overcome? The only way is for each grocer to overcome it for himself. He can easily do it—there are innumerable ways of showing his customers that he is fair, honest and dependable. There are also innumerable ways of showing the opposite, and the shame is that many grocers have used that kind of proof rather than the other kind.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The defendants in the rotten egg cases which grew out of the Cassidy exposure of last year, notably M. F. Craven, notorious trafficker in rotten eggs for food under the names of the Eastern Provision Co. and the Consolidated Egg Yolk Co., and Morris Frank, who was Craven's man Friday in the Consolidated outfit, have entered pleas of guilty to all the indictments which were found against them at that time.

Receiving an Order so You Are Not Bound to Fill It.

There is general interest in a form for the acceptance or acknowledgment of an order which will not bind the seller to fill it if he should find that the concern whose order was being acknowledged was not worthy of credit. In a case decided in New York (140 N. Y. Supp. 916), known as the National Cash Register Co. vs. McCann, it was held that "a card sent to a party who had ordered a cash register assuring him that the order would have the company's best attention, was not an acceptance, but merely a promise to consider it; and the order having been withdrawn before there was any other or further acceptance, there was no sale." It seems as if this case furnished the solution of a proper form.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Grocery World and General Merchant" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

Can a Small or Medium-sized Grocer Profitably Roast His Own Coffee?

By William B. Harris.

Can the grocer of moderate size profitably roast his own coffee? This is a question that is awakening interest all over the country to a greater or lesser extent. Not only is it being considered by the grocer as a means of increasing his coffee output, but it is a question that is also receiving attention on the part of the large wholesale dealers in roasted bulk and package coffees.

There is absolutely no us trying to dodge the situation, for it is a live issue and certain to command greater attention on the part of all branches of the trade as the business progresses.

The best answer to the query is the reply that the grocer is doing this very thing in many different locations. The success or failure of the venture depends very largely upon the grocer, although the location of the store and the community in which he is located also bear an important part in connection therewith. The mere fact that the grocer has a roasting outfit and does his own roasting will not in itself bring him the coffee business in his community. He can install the machinery if he has the money to pay for it and, after a few trials, can learn to take off a roast at the proper shade. These facts alone will not make the business a success. The important questions to be considered in connection therewith are first, how to buy his green coffees, and second, how to sell the roasted product. These two branches of the business are up to the grocer himself.

There is a grocer located in New York City, on a prominent avenue, whose store is a large one, employing five clerks and running a number of wagons. This dealer is putting out three grades of coffee costing him 21, 22 and 23 cents, which he retails at 30, 35, 40 and 45 cents. The three blends are practically the same coffees. He is absolutely unwilling to be convinced that this is the situation, even though he is paying very nearly the same price for all three. For a coffee costing him 22 cents he is getting 40 and 45 cents from his customers. The profit from the sale of this particular blend is entirely to large. No grocer, whether he has a roasting outfit or not, can expect to make a success of his coffee department on such a basis.

It is vitally important that the green coffees purchased should be the right kinds and grades for his line of business. If he does not understand making selections he must depend upon someone who does. His different grades should be coffees of different cup character, and he should be satisfied with a reasonable profit on his blends.

The actual operation of the machine is not difficult. Control of the gas flame and of the cooler fan is simple, the principal difficulty being as to the exact time at which the roast should be discharged from the cylinder. Undoubtedly, he will make one or two mistakes at the start, but if he is careful not to over-roast his product a little practice will enable him to take off a satisfactory roast, and as time progresses he becomes accustomed to doing so without the slightest difficulty.

The machine in itself is a business getter to a certain extent, as it is a tremendous advertising asset for any store in which it is located, but it takes a live grocer to get business even with these conditions in his favor.

In large cities success is not so certain as in smaller communities. The grocer in the city can obtain fresh roasted coffee and the roasting operation is not such a novelty. The ideal location is in a community in which there are anywhere from 5,000 to 15,000 inhabitants. In a town of this description, with a store properly located, the grocer who is alive to the possibilities of the coffee business can easily command the largest percentage of the trade, and is certain to secure the patronage of customers desiring the best blends, which are, by the way, the blends that will give him the biggest profit.

The grocer will not find very much of a saving in the actual cost of his various coffees for the reason that competition is cutting the prices of all grades of roasted coffee to the minimum. He will find, however, that he has a much better chance to judge between the different coffees he is putting out, where he secures them green, than where he buys them roasted, and after a time he will be able to distinguish to a certain extent between the various coffees shipped him. So long as he sticks to his grade and secures his green coffees at fair figures the chances are decidedly in his favor as to a successful outcome. If, after his business is on the increase, he does as many are inclined to do, attempts to buy his coffees on a price basis in order to secure an additional half cent profit, he will get unsatisfactory results in his blends and promptly lose what he has gained.

In this connection the grocer must not lose sight of the fact that many of the shipments of coffee coming into this country are undesirable as to cup quality. These coffees are all sold somewhere and they are all sold on a price basis, naturally at a reduction as compared with the same kinds of coffee that have desirable cup character. The standards as to the green coffees purchased should be fixed at the start and kept absolutely the same irrespective of an advance or decline in the market. Blends should be made up from these green coffee standards and they should be kept absolutely uniform. With a proper amount of care in connection with the roasting, and some little energy and ingenuity marketing his various blends, the grocer is almost certain to meet with success.

EVERY Housewife would rather buy mince meat than to undertake the long tedious process of making it if she could be sure of getting the same quality.

Armour's Veribest Mince Meat

is made from choicest fruits, meats and spices, as carefully prepared as in the home kitchen.

It is the generous amount of raisins, currants, apples and citron that makes home-made mince meat better than most of the manufactured product. Armour's Veribest Mince Meat is like that made at home—plenty of fruit, carefully selected and thoroughly cleaned—Muscatel and Sultana raisins, Grecian currants and imported citron. The meat used is prime beef, and the kidney suet is the best quality. The delightfully smooth blend, so noticeable in our Veribest Mince Meat, is the result of a special process we have perfected. All the spices thoroughly permeate the entire product, thereby eliminating any possibility of that bitter taste prevalent in some brands of mince meat.

Veribest Condensed Mince Meat and Veribest Concentrated Mince Meat, for household use, in paper cartons and 1½ and 3-pound pails. Moist Mince Meat for hotels, restaurants, etc., in kits and barrels.

Another Collection Agency Scheme.

Harrisburg, Pa.,
January 8, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Kindly give me any information you have regarding the "Mercantile and Physicians' Reporting Agency, Albany, N.Y." I send contract forms used by same.

Respectfully yours,
J. M. BRENNER.

This correspondent sends two papers, one a "guarantee" and the other a "certificate of membership." The "guarantee" is the same old "guarantee" that the agency will collect four times as much as the membership fee within three years, provided the customer supplies twenty accounts aggregating $250. This guarantee, standing alone, would be all right if the concern making it were financially responsible, but its value is always—and in this case—totally destroyed by the following: "otherwise (that is, if they don't collect four times as much) this guarantee shall remain in force and the client shall be entitled to the full use of the agency's credit reporting system and the collection of any claims submitted until such time as the above guarantee is fulfilled by both parties."

In other words, "we will within three years collect four times what we charge you for membership fee. If we don't, you can still use our agency without any more membership fee!" This "guarantee" is absolutely valueless to anybody.

The "certificate of membership" is a handsome pink paper with a gold seal. It provides that the subscriber shall pay the agency $30 for the privilege of having the agency try to collect bad accounts for him at the regular commission fee of 10 per cent. This is all the subscriber gets for his $30 except a promise by the agency to furnish "a special report on any delinquent of whom it may have a record, although the party of the first part (the agency) is to be in no way liable for any inaccuracy in its special ratings or reports."

This is an exceedingly one-sided contract and any retailer who accepts it as consideration for $30 is apt to wish for his $30 back.

The Third Contest Is On!

The "Grocery World and General Merchant's" contests on various phases of the sale of nationally advertised products are attracting wide attention and bringing out some wonderfully strong matter.

The third subject is:—

3—If it (a nationally advertised product) should be thrown out of stock, what is the better way to do it, refuse to sell it, or keep it on hand but diplomatically avoid its sale?

This is a practical storekeeping question which all grocers are compelled to answer for themselves every day—help others to answer it in the right way.

The following prizes will be awarded:—

Alleged Libel on Baltimore Packe

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We notice in Whoever originated this sta ment could not have been miliar with the cost of pack

From the very best and m reliable information obtainable cost in 1913 from 75 to 80 ce

11—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because you are bound to be as uncertain about the others as your customers are.

One reason a consumer hesitates to buy a brand she never heard of is that she is taking a chance.

So do you take a chance when you sell such a brand. Neither of you know how the thing will turn out; it has made no reputation, its manufacturer has not had sufficient confidence in it to back it with advertising. It may be all right and it may not be. There is no sureness and no confidence.

Consider carefully that this chance is never present when a nationally advertised brand is sold. That brand has simply got to be all right, or the manufacturer will dig his own grave with his advertising dollars.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no change during the week, except a hardening in low grade Indias and Ceylons, due to scarcity of these grades of teas all over the world. The balance of the list shows no change and fair demand.

Coffee.

The coffee market shows practically no change for the week. The demand is light, and the market is not strong, but fairly steady. The outlook is not much higher than a week ago. Mild grades are very strongly maintained; demand fair. Java and Mocha quiet and steady.

Sugar.

There has been a readjustment of the prices of soft and hard sugars, other than granulated, during the week, though granulated itself is unchanged for the week. The adjustment was necessary because the other sugars did not decline when granulated did, and were all out of proportion to granulated. Some softs, for instance, were actually ruling higher than granulated. The demand for refined sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup shows no change and fair demand. Sugar syrup is unchanged and quiet. Molasses ditto.

Fish.

There has been no change in mackerel during the week. The demand is light, as is usual after the holidays. Prices unchanged. Cod, hake and haddock steady to firm and unchanged. Salmon of all grades in seasonable demand at ruling prices. Domestic sardines firm and quiet. Imported sardines still very high. General situation unchanged.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are weak. Nominally the market is 65 to 67½ cents in a large way for Maryland 3s, but there are rumors of sales at 62½ cents. The situation is unchanged and not very encouraging to holders. Tomatoes are in fair demand. Corn is unchanged, quiet and steady. Peas too are unchanged. The supply of low grade peas is large and the market is heavy. Future peas, more especially the better grades, have sold with fair freedom. Apples unchanged and quiet. California canned goods unchanged and dull from first hands. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

The demand for prunes has been fair during the week with prices unchanged. Peaches are easy and demand inclined to be light. Apricots continue high; demand very slow. Raisins are still dull, but the California combination has not reduced its prices and in the Eastern markets at least is selling very little. Currants, citron, dates and figs all unchanged and in seasonable demand.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are perhaps a shade easier for the week; demand fair. Marrows are unchanged and in fair request. California limas are selling very fairly at unchanged prices. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for butter continues good and prices are unchanged for the week. Under grades, however, are somewhat closely cleaning up and prices on these grades are from one to two cents higher than a week ago. There is still ample supply of storage butter with only moderate demand. The outlook is for a continued good demand with no radical change in price.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs are increasing considerably and the consumptive demand is at present only moderate. Therefore the market is steady at a decline of 3 cents. There are still some storage eggs available, but the demand is light, owing to the fact that the price is too close to the price of fresh. German eggs are also coming in at 3 to 4 cents below the price of domestic eggs. The future of the egg market for several weeks depends upon the weather.

Cheese.

The demand for cheese shows no change for the week. Stocks are light and no immediate change seems in sight.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with a light seasonable demand. Pure lard is steady with light demand and unchanged prices. Compound lard is dull at ruling prices. Barreled pork is weak and slow, but unchanged in price. Dried beef and canned meats are steady and unchanged for the week with light demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Sugar.

Refined Sugars.—At the opening of the market last Monday morning a general readjustment of list prices was made by all refiners. Eagle Tablets, Crystal Dominoes, Cut Loaf, Mould A and Crown A were reduced 25 points; all other hard sugars down to and including Confectioners' A were reduced 10 points. All soft sugars from No. 1 to No. 14 inclusive were reduced 15 points. The revision in prices places list prices on all hard sugars on basis of fine granulated 4.05 cents.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Nineteen hundred and thirteen just finished has certainly been a most interesting year in our line. First of all the tariff has been changed, which in itself means a milestone in the history of our trade, and the various changes which the reduction of the tariff has brought forth, and will show more clearly in the near future, will, as we certainly hope, mean an enlarged business in the line of imported products. In fact, there is no doubt in our mind that a great many more imported food products will be brought into this country in the near future than has ever been the case before. But not only the tariff alone will influence those larger importations, but also the fact that imported goods in the food line are becoming more popular and their use is becoming more general, and a great many articles that some years ago were considered delicacies have to-day become regular staples.

Nineteen hundred and thirteen has certainly been a most interesting year in our line, as the remarks that follow will clearly demonstrate. Our reports from Holland in regard to the herring catch report a good catch and satisfactory prices paid to the fishermen in spite of the low selling prices which have prevailed in the United States for Holland herring. The quality of last season's herring was considered generally good, and very little complaint has been made as to poor quality of Holland herring, which is quite a rarity.

The catch during 1913 in Holland amounted to 768,000 barrels as against 517,500 barrels in 1912, 650,000 barrels in 1911, 758,000 barrels in 1910, 755,000 barrels in 1909, 659,500 barrels in 1908, 700,000 barrels in 1907, 717,500 barrels in 1906.

These statistics show that the catch has been the largest in many years with the exception of the one in 1907.

The duty having been taken off salt herring, we have been able to offer these goods at very much lower figures, and very attractive prices have increased the consumption.

The catch in Scotland has been only fair. We do not know as yet the exact statistics, and will publish them later on as soon as received by us. The taking off the duty has also had an effect on the price of Scotch herring, which has not made itself felt as much on Holland herring because of the poorer catch in Scotland. Prices for Scotch herring ought to have been very satisfactory to our friends in Scotland. The quality has been good and the demand may also be called good and steadily increasing.

In Norway the catch of Iceland herring proved very large, and still in spite of the larger quantities caught, almost all of these Iceland herring seem to have gone into consumption, which shows that the herring trade in general is increasing. The catch of the fat herring in Norway has been practically nil, that is, speaking of sizes which are salable in the United States. The Sloe herring fishing is only now beginning and so far is not yielding a very good result. The trade for Norway herring in this country is slowly but steadily increasing.

BURK'S
Breakfast Relish

(Trade-Mark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.)

This product is usually called "Minced Ham" by the consumer. It consists of choice, tender pieces of pork, chopped to the proper degree of fineness and stuffed in a linen container. It is smoked just long enough to acquire that pleasant and appetizing flavor which only hickory wood can impart. Weight about five pounds each.

After the bag is removed in the same manner as from our Lunch Roll, the Relish is cut in thin slices, and the only additional preparation necessary for serving is to fry it a few minutes over a hot fire.

This makes it one of the quickest, most economical and at the same time one of the most satisfying and nutritious breakfasts obtainable.

If you are not already using Burk's Breakfast Relish—give it a trial. Like all other "Burk" products—it is the best on the market.

BURK'S

prices advanced steadily. T demand kept up until well n to the holiday season, and we pect that the remaining sto will be sold after the trade op up again after the new year. C protests to Norway against poor quality furnished last sea have shown good results beca the qaulity in general of Norw mackerel this season has b quite good and satisfactory every way, and so has the assc ment.

This past year, 1913, will be c that will be long remembered the imported sardine tra Never before in the history Norwegian sardines has th been such a small catch, sucl scarcity and such a dema Smoked sardines were at a p mium all this last year. L year's winter fishing proved failure. The summer fishi again proved a failure, and t winter fishing now in progress as much of a failure as last win fishing has been. In consequer of this very little stock has be available, and the packers in N way remain with enormous stoc of cans on hand which they ha been unable to fill. The few sa dines which have been shipp over here were sold readi promptly on arrival, and at stea ily advancing prices. All in a the Norwegian sardine business 1913 has been the most unsat factory on record, only becau no supplies were available.

There is very little to be sa about the French sardine fishir We have become used during la years to speak of a failure of t French sardine fishing, and 19 is no exception to the rule. Ve few French sardines were caug and only very few packed, a those few that have been pack found ready sale. The conditi of the French sardine market to be attributed, not so much poor catch as to the most unsati factory condition which exists France to-day, in so much as th sardine packers and the sardi fishermen are at war. It has be common practice that the fishe men would not bring to sho only a stipulated amount of sa dines, and even if the catch wou have been good, the fisherme would not have brought a gre deal more to shore for fear th prices paid to them would declin in spite of the protestations of th manufacturers who are ready a willing to pay for any sardin that may be brought to shor This condition has become so i supportable that some packe have practically closed their pac ing establishments and thereb shut out the fishermen.

While the writer of this, ou Mr. Porges, was in Europe la summer it seemed almost as if th situation would be settled sati factorily, but since then no sati ctory progress has been made to ettle this unfortunate affair. onsequently the French sardine arket is of very little importance ist now and will remain so until e can get sufficient supplies to pply the demand.

In Portugal the catch has been ist fair. We could have sold ree times the quantity of Portuese sardines if we only could ve had them. There has always een some fishing going on. ome sardines have been shipped us and they all found ready le, but not enough to supply the emand. Naturally, in view of e scarcity of French sardines, e Portuguese packers have enavored to put on the market a roduct which in some cases is early equal to the French. They ave perfected their packing arngement, and we are in a posion to-day to offer to the trade me Portuguese sardines which e almost equal to the French d cost less money. It is only tural that such conditions ould tend to make Portuguese rdines more popular and bigger llers and they really have beme a regular staple in the marts of the United States.

Norwegian canned goods in neral have had a good season uring 1913. The sale of Noregian specialties like fish balls d meat balls has increased ite considerable because these ods are becoming generally own. A great many hospitals ve adopted this fish ball diet r their patients because these h balls are not only nourishing d most delicate in flavor and ste, but easily digested and rictly pure. Then again, the orwegians have started to pack a large scale kippered herring hich heretofore have been ought over from England and cotland. The Norwegians cked these kippered herring beuse they had no sardines to ck, and now this kippered herng industry has become a staple Norway.

Norwegian French herring in tomato, a most delicate little morsel, the sale of which is increasing daily.

In England and Scotland the kippered herring business has been most unfortunate last season. No stocks were available. In spite of the very high prices hardly any supplies could be had this past year.

All in all 1913 proved satisfactory to our trade and while profits in our line have been rather reduced, the volume of business done is increasing daily, thereby equalizing matters. There is just one dark cloud threatening in the horizon of the salt fish business, and that is the bill introduced by Representative McKellar in the House, which prohibits shipment in interstate commerce of fish after it has been kept in cold store for two months. Of course the salt fish interests in this country are up in arms against this bill, because they want salt and preserved fish exempt from the provisions of this bill. It is a well-known fact and has been proven that salt fish may be kept for long periods, say for a year or more in cold store without any deterioration whatever. While this McKellar bill may be justified in the case of fresh fish, of which we know nothing about, we certainly do know something about salt fish, and we can say definitely that it would mean a great injustice not only to the trade, but to the salt fish eating public of the United States in general, if salt fish and preserved fish were not exempt from the McKellar bill. Most of the fresh salt fish comes into this market during the summer months. Our hot climate makes it impossible to keep salt fish except it is kept in cold store. and if this bill should become a law in its present form it would mean that practically during the entire summer season no salt fish could be shipped to the people in the interior of the United States. Those that would be most seriously effected would be the poor people because they are the ones who consume salt herring and other salt fish. It is not the rich and well-to-do that are the large consumers of salt fish. It is the poor, and it would therefore be a great injustice if our protests were not given proper consideration by the committee in charge of this bill.

Employees of Well-known Baltimore House Hold Annual Dinner

EMPLOYEES AND GUESTS AT McCORMICK & CO.'S DINNER

Plaintive melodies that breathed of Scotland's "bonnie Highlands" filled the roof Garden of the Hotel Emerson last evening, when McCormick & Co., manufacturing chemists and importers, gave the firm's annual banquet to its department heads, salesmen and office staff.

The music came from a pair of real Scotch bagpipes, played by George McKenzie, who is a member of the firm's staff, and whose father, hailing from the Highlands, was piper major in the English army in India. The elder McKenzie taught the son the art. Mr. McKenzie was dressed in the colors of his clan, kilt, tartan and sporan.

This was not the only feature to make the banquet one out of the ordinary, for between the courses the diners joined in singing old-time songs, and at the end Willoughby M. McCormick, president of the firm, presented each of the banqueters a handsome scarf pin as a souvenir.

In turn the two heads of the firm were presented by the eighty-four employees present two handsome Christmas gifts—to "Mr. W. M." a handsome plateglass mirror and to "Mr. R. A." a leather traveling bag.

The president of the company, in his address announced that McCormick & Co. would maintain an extensive exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco.

The spirit of the entertainment was markedly that of co-operation, and the employee and employers alike seemed members of one big family.

Roberdeau Annan McCormick was toastmaster, and the invocation was delivered by the Rev. Hugh Pendleton McCormick, brother of the president and of the toastmaster. The addresses followed the general theme of business efficiency and pointed out the need of faultless team work to insure success in commerce as well as in all other undertakings carried on by organizations. The extent of the field covered is shown by the toasts responded to and the speakers:—

Selling Talks With Clerks

Are You A Country Grocer?—We mean a cross-roads, six steps to the door, open lot grocer. Hay and grain "department" in the rear and kerosene "department" on the right as you enter. Then put in Nabiscos and stuffed olives and cakes that go with ice cream. Do it if you want to be talked about. All good advertising begins and ends in talking about you. Two and three miles around your neighborhood girls and the mothers of girls are constantly having parties—little blow-outs—and the tid bits served at these little affairs come from "town."

Not that these girls and these mothers don't want to patronize you, but because you don't want to patronize them. You don't step in line. You give the salesman the Ha! Ha! when he suggests a can of assorted cakes to sell for 18 cents a pound. You ask him if he thinks you're a Park & Tilford store when he shows up a can of sliced peaches that can be sold for 15 cents. You good, honest, hard working country grocerymen limit yourselves. You simply banish your better class neighborhood trade by not carrying anything they want—on "occasions."

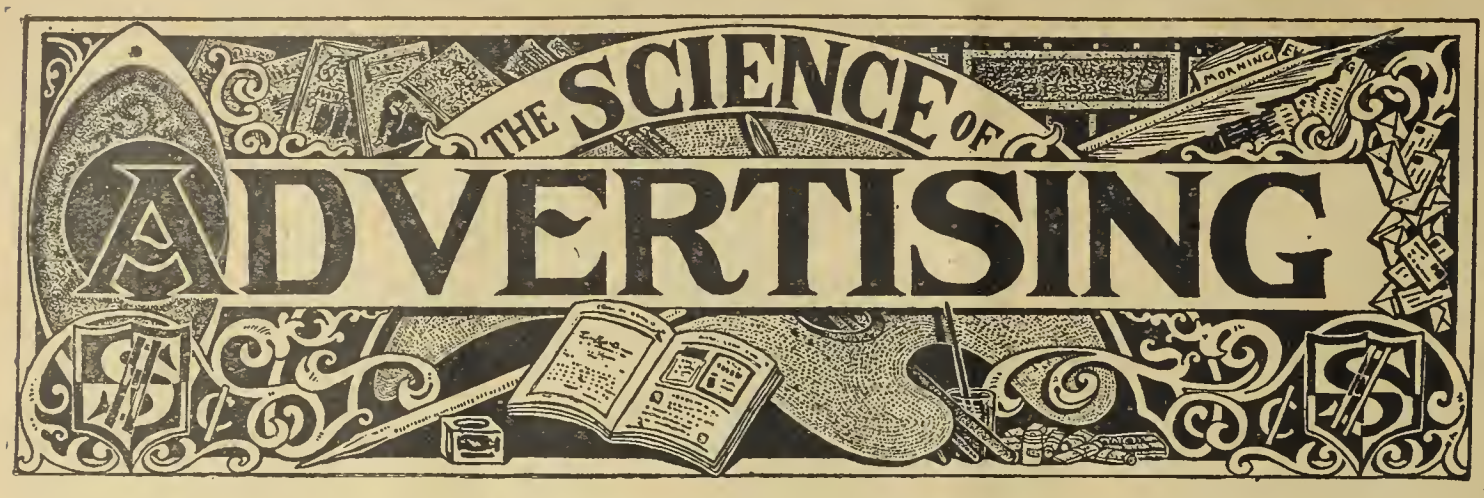
Read the Following—You'll Be Up Against It One of These Days.—Said she, "I can buy just as good peas for 10 cents a can as you sell for 12½ cents." "She" was wrong and the demonstration followed. The 12½ cent can was opened—perfectly even in size and color. Can practically full. Taste as nearly perfect in natural flavor as is possible to get. Size medium. The 10-cent ones—contents not nearly so full. Color—half yellow, half green and full green. Size—uneven. Flavor—flat, characterless; liquor muddy. Notice these characteristics if you please.

Useful is that useful does.



Columbia, Pa., January 5, 1914.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Please tell me how I may become proficient in writing advertising. I have a good position here as clerk and window dresser and I believe I could make it better by bringing up the advertising of the firm if I was capable of handling it. I did fairly well at school in composition, and think I should be able to write advertising, with some instruction and practice. How can you tell when advertising is bringing results? Can you learn to write advertising through a correspondence school?

Respectfully yours, J. R. C.

I am convinced that the best way to learn the advertising business—how to write advertising, how to take care of it, and so on—is to join a good advertising agency and work through all the departments. This is not practical for this correspondent. The next best thing in my judgment is for him to take a good correspondence course. This will help him a great deal, but by that I mean it will only help to develop what is already in him, if there is anything in him in the advertising line. Neither a correspondence school, nor an advertising agency, nor anything else, will make a good advertising man out of somebody who wasn't meant by his creator to be one.

A correspondence school will give you technical knowledge of type, how to combine and assemble it, how to write advertising, how to display it, follow-up systems of circulars, etc., and so on. A very good feature is that you will be required to write advertisements on suggested subjects and submit them to the school, where they will be criticised by expert advertising writers. This alone is very valuable practice. There are several correspondence advertising schools; probably one of the best is that of the Page-Davis Co., of New York.

"How can you tell when advertising is bringing results?" Very easily, if you are advertising in a way to get results. If you are doing the vague and general advertising that so many retailers do, you can almost never know, because almost never are there any traceable results. The kind of advertising that brings direct results is an offer of a specific piece of goods at a certain price. When people come into your store, immediately after such an advertisement appears, and ask for the advertised article, you can ordinarily credit the advertisement with it. Where the customer also buys other goods which you feel sure you would not have sold if the customer had not have been led to come in for the article advertised, it is proper to also credit the profit on these to the advertising. This of course is very simple. The hardest problem is for the merchant who advertises in a more or less general way, but regularly, and who cannot trace any actual results, to tell whether his advertising is doing him any good. Many merchants are in doubt and always in doubt on this point. They try to feel satisfied if their business keeps up, and particularly if it shows a steady increase, feeling sure that the advertising had something to do with it. Advertising for many merchants is always more or less unsatisfacto —nothing more or less than guess—because they are alwa working on faith, with nothi tangible to go on. I think t usual attitude of such advertise however, is right—where a ret business is regularly and stead advertised and kept before t public, some results are bound accrue in the long run from t general publicity. Whether t advertiser is paying too high price for his results, however, always problematical. Perso ally, I would rather do gene advertising than none, but r strong preference is for the ki of advertising which is intend to get positive, direct inquiri and which you can with sor certainty know is not doing i duty if it fails to get them.

CCXLI.—The Washington State Decision Upholding Price-fixing by the Manufacturer.

In the last two articles I have discussed the power of manufacturers to prevent price-cutting upon their products, and have advanced various suggestions by which a manufacturer, if he sincerely wished to, could very largely eliminate cutting or curtail it. The basis of all of my arguments and all of my suggestions, was the admitted fundamental fact that any seller of merchandise, not a public service corporation, can sell a given buyer, if he sells him at all, upon conditions which he, the seller, may make, and that one of those conditions may be that the buyer shall not resell below a certain figure.

A case has just been decided by the highest court of the State of Washington which confirms everything I have said. While a decision by a State court, it has much more than State importance, because it considered and discussed all of the recent United States cases regarding restraint of trade, and decided that the price-fixing contract which was before the court, and which was of the precise type discussed in recent articles, was legal and not in conflict with them.

The plaintiff in the Washington case was the Fisher Flour Mills, which sold C. O. Swanson, a retailer (the defendant), a carload of flour. Before the Fisher people sold Swanson, they compelled him to agree to maintain a certain retail selling price, which they, the Fisher Co., had fixed. The invoice contained the following printed notice that the sale was made on condition that the retail price should be maintained:

RETAIL PRICES.

Our flour is sold on condition, which is made a part of the consideration of sale of said goods, that the purchaser if he retails the same will maintain our fixed minimum retail selling prices, and if he wholesales them, they are sold subject to the same conditions. Nothing in the above conditions shall prevent the purchaser fixing the selling price in excess of the above list when costs of transportation or other local conditions necessitate the same.

Swanson violated his agreement, cut the price and was sued for $1,000 damages. He defended on the ground that the contract to hold the price was illegal because in restraint of competition, but the court decides against him. The opinion is long and I cannot reproduce it all, but give the following salient extracts:—

A single question is asked: Has a manufacturer who has given a reputation to particular goods, which he creates, the right to fix in his contract of sale to retailers (this manufacturer sold direct to retailers; the law would be the same if the sale had been made to a jobber.—E. J. B.), a reasonable minimum price at which these goods shall be sold to consumers? It may be premised as a postulate that a manufacturer who has imparted a reputation to his goods may lawfully employ any means to secure the legitimate benefits of that reputation not inhibited by statutory enactment or inimical to a sound public policy.

Contracts fixing prices as incidental to some main contract and involving less than a controlling part of a given commodity in a given market not proceeding from or tending to create or to maintain a monopoly will be sustained when the restriction is reasonable in reference to the parties and reasonable in reference to the interest of the public. That is to say, when the price fixed is fairly necessary to the protection to the covenantee and fair to the public in that it furnishes only a reasonable profit to the contracting parties.

There is no reason for declaring a contract of a single manufacturer who has no monopoly or approximation thereto void.

A contract fixing retail prices to the consumer cannot have an effect appreciably inimical to the public interest because it cannot fix prices at an ureasonable high figure without defeating its own purposes by either signally failing to maintain the fixed price, or putting the individual manufacturer out of business. In either case it fails to restrict competition. Either the consumers will not buy the products at the prices fixed, or if they do the high prices will stimulate competition in protection, and the price will inevitably fall. The given manufacturer will thus be compelled to accept one or the other alternative. He must either fix the price to cover only a reasonable profit or he must retire from business.

But where a given product is not in the hands of one man or a combination of men there is no monopoly, either actual or approximate, and the public has no interest hostile to a contract by a single manufacturer among many intended and reasonably calculated to enable him to maintain an unusual standard of excellence in that part of the aggregate of the given product which he puts out. On the contrary, the public interest so far as it is touched by the contract is in sympathy with this, because served by it.

Applying the principles which we have developed from the cases, it seems clear that this contract is valid. The facts alleged negative the idea of any existing monopoly in the appellent, and the contract has no tendency to create one. The retail selling price was fixed merely as an ancilliary to the contract of sale to the respondent. The fixing of the price was reasonably necessary to protect the appellant, and reasonable as applied to the public, in that it provides only for a fair profit. Fairly considered, the contract, while slightly restricting competition, is primarily intended to promote competition by enabling the appellant to compete with other high-grade flours while maintaining the excellence of its product.

Finally, it seems to us an economic fallacy to assume that the competition which, in the absence of monopoly, benefits the public, is competition between rival retailers. The true competition is between rival articles, a competition in excellence, which can never be maintained if, through the perfidy of the retailer who cuts prices for his own ulterior purposes, the manufacturer is forced to compete in prices with goods of his own production, while the retailer recoups his losses on the cut price by the sale of other articles at, or above their reasonable price. It is a fallacy to assume that the price-cutter pockets the loss. The public makes it up on other purchases. The manufacturer alone is injured, except as the public is also injured through the manufacturer's inability in the face of cut prices, to maintain the excellence of his product. Fixing the price on all brands of high-grade flour is a very different thing from fixing the price on one brand of high-grade flour. The one means destruction of all competition and of all incentive to increased excellence, the other means heightened competition and intensified incentive to increased excellence. It will not do to say that the manufacturer has no interest to protect by contract in the goods after he has sold them. They are personally identified and mor guaranteed by his mark and his vertisement. His reputation a manufacturer, one of his chief ass is bound up in them. The attit of the respondent, who has wilf violated his contract, presents equities in his favor. The all tions of the complaint show that public interest will in no wise su from an enforcement of the c tract. As between the parties, appellant is entitled to the re for which he prays.

I repeat what I have said be —that I have never seen a sion of any court which disag with the above. All of United States Supreme Court cisions were based on totally ferent cases—cases where a r ufacturer has sold a jobber, had sold a retailer, and where manufacturer had attempted compel the retailer to obey a tract which he, the manufact had never had with him; c where the owner of a patent tried to extend unreasonably legal monopoly which his pa gave him, and so on. It has ways been the law, even be this Washington decision, th private seller could make co tions before he agreed to sel his buyer, and could enforce t conditions.

In a nutshell, what does decision establish as the First, that any seller can m as a condition of sale, a pro that the buyer shall resell certain reasonable price. Thi not monopoly, but needed pro tion to everybody, including consumer. Second, that the bu will be prevented from break this condition under which, al he got the goods. This law protect a manufacturer makes such a contract with own buyer, but it will not autl ize him to interfere with wha done by the person who b from his (the manufacture buyer. To control the sec buyer, the first buyer must m his own contract with him, an the first is legal the second also. Thus the price can be ma tained, through a series of c tracts between each party and own buyer, from manufacture consumer.

Here's Some Real Collection Letters.

A customer of mine showed me the other day a bunch of collection letters he had just paid a couple of dollars for from somebody in New York. There were three different letters in the bunch and they came in pads—looked like typewriting. You filled in the name of the dead beat and the amount he owed. There was a lot of testimonials come with 'em that said they were so good that you could almost get money out of people that didn't owe any.

"I'm going to try these on some of my old moss-back accounts," said my customer. "If I can only get in one account I've got my money back and more."

"Well, you won't do it, I'll bet a lemon," I said.

"Why won't I?"

"Because the letters are too blamed polite," I said. "Just like all of these made-up collection letters. You fellows can't seem to remember that you're only asking dead beats to give you what belongs to you. Suppose one of your clerks collected some money and put it in his pocket; would you coax him and say 'please Charlie or Bill, pay back that money?' Not so's you could notice it you wouldn't. You'd give him a chance to pay it back and if he didn't do it you'd call him a thief and send him to jail."

"That would be different," he said.

"It wouldn't be different! I consider that a skunk that buys goods of you and don't pay for 'em is just the same kind of a thief, and if I wrote him any letters I'd tell him so."

"Why don't you write some collection letters?" he said sort of sarcastic.

"By gum, I will some time," I said. I didn't have time then and I didn't think of the thing any more until last Sunday afternoon when I was home. I made up my mind I'd go to it, and I did. By rights, I ought to charge a big price for these letters, but that's the reason I ain't worth a million dollars to-day—because I give so much good stuff away. What I'd do would be to send three letters, one after the other, each one hotter than the last. Understand I wouldn't send 'em to anybody but plumb dead beats who had been given plenty of chance and could pay something if they were decent enough to want to. Stick a pin in that. Where it was a case of old Mrs. Jones, who couldn't pay because her 70-year-old husband had had to stop being night watchman because of rheumatiz, I'd cut off my thumb before I'd send the letters to her.

Now bearing that in mind, here's letter No. 1:—

Mr. Thomas N. Jones.

Dear Sir:—You owe me $24.68 for groceries that I furnished you in April, 1911? Why aren't you man enough to pay it? You know you can pay it—some of it, anyway—if you want to. Are you trying to steal this money from me? I know you can pay it, because the coat your wife had on last Sunday cost a good bit more than that. That coat was part bought with some of my money, do you know that?

If you are an honest man you will pay that money before the week is out. Yours, JOHN SMITH.

The thing to do is to pick out some point that's special to the person who's going to get the letter; like what I said about his wife's coat. Ready-made letters can't do that. Find the weak place and jab right into it.

Now we'll say nothing happens from this letter. By the way, send a boy with 'em—don't send 'em by mail; they might burn a hole in the bag. Here's No. 2:—

Mr. Thomas N. Jones.

Dear Sir:—You did not pay my account and you are not an honest man. How is it to feel you are thief? What do you think yourself, anyway, cheating a m who trusted you for goods? A you satisfied with yourself? Wh do your wife and children think you? Are they proud of th square and honest father? Becau you can pay me what you owe if you want to. The trouble is y don't want to. Why don't you wa to? You have shown why—becau you are a thief at heart.

Yours, JOHN SMITH

If this gets by without a thing coming, I'd send one m and it would be a sizzler. He is:—

Mr. Thomas N. Jones, Skunk.

Dear Sir:—Again I write y about my account which you a getting ready to rob me of, thou you can pay it. You are a me little thief and a skunk besid You are meaner than the po thief who steals milk and bre off people's doorsteps, for he h to do it to keep from starvi while you stole food when y didn't have to. Whenever you s me in the street remember I a thinking when I look at you, "Th is a thief—he robbed me of $24.6 What a big man you must seem your family, because a man's fa ily always knows when he pays bills. All right, Thomas N. Jon skunk, if you feel you can affo to rob me of $24.68, go ahead, b I wouldn't be in your boots for thousand times $24.68.

Yours truly, JOHN SMITH

How's them? Not much o about them, is there? Can see them going out and not br ing something back? One th you've got to look out Thomas N. Jones may take it his head to come down and you. You needn't care anyth about that. I know a fellow says he can always do busi better with a man by making mad first—if you can sting Jo up till he's chewing his whisk he's so mad, so much the bet You may get your money. what do you care whether you it or not? You don't even ca he lams you—lam back. Yo had a bully good time, all

Where the addition brine or water is necessary for oper preparation, the can ould contain only sufficient uid to fill the space between e meat and cover the product. any canners of clams have ked the Board to rule regarding e weight of clams necessary to mply with Decision No. 144. s a result of investigations the oard states as its opinion that ns which contain the weights of ained clam meat shown below ll fulfill the requirements. ese weights are "cut out" ights, i. e., the weight of meat t in the can after all free liquor s been drained off:—

When cans of other sizes are ed, they should contain pro- rtional weights of meat.

It should be remembered, the oard states, that a loss of weight most invariably occurs when ms are processed, and due al- wance should be made for this ss in weighing the clams into e can. It may be said that the vestigations made in the Bureau dicate that the loss in weight in ocessing varies from about 5 to per cent., the average loss ing about 10 per cent. of the eight of clams placed in the ns. The weights of drained m meat should not fall below ose given above, or, if a vari- ion occurs, it should be as often ove as below the weights speci- d. HOLT.

Grape Display.

Make a neat and attractive display of grapes. This window does not require any work, only for the background in the rear. To make this, first get four sticks, the height to correspond to the size of the window, using wooden hoops for the arch part. Nail them to the bottom of the window and support them at the top from the ceiling with fine wire. Cover the arches with green crepe paper. Cut some in strips about two inches wide, and pin one end to the arch, twist and fasten the other end to the ceiling and sides, as in illustration. Fasten several large bunches of grapes under the arches. Now cover the bottom of the window with green crepe paper. Along the front, on paper napkins, place a couple of glasses of jelly or preserve or grape butter. In the centre place a sign card with lettering as in cut. At each side place a bottle of grape juice. At the rear, under the arc place three tall glass dishes filled with grapes.

Corn Meal.

Corn meal is a good selling article just now. To arrange trim, first cover the bottom of the window with pale lavender c paper. In front place a comb of honey and a can of good syrup. the centre, on a large plate or platter, place a piece of the cooked or mush. Cut off a piece or two, as though ready for frying. At side on napkins place a large pile of the corn meal. At the rear p some of the lavender crepe paper. Place four or more bags of meal against it. Finish in between with twisted strips of the sa Suspend a neat sign card with lettering as in illustration.

A Surprising Quantity of Dutch Vegetables Are Sold in American Markets.

An increase has taken place in the exports of potatoes from Holland to the United States. In October and November, 1913, the declared value of potatoes exported to the United States was $70,952, while the declared value of all vegetables invoiced was $114,547. During the corresponding months of 1912 no separate record was kept of potatoes, the shipments thereof being small, but the declared value of all vegetables exported to the United States during the quarter ended December 31, 1912, was only $13,307. During October and November, 1913, the total value of vegetable shipments exclusive of potatoes was $43,595, showing a great increase of other vegetables exported to the United States. This increase is mainly in sauer kraut, the duty on which the new American tariff reduced from 40 to 25 per cent. However, the largest exporter of sauer kraut in Holland explains the increa shipments with the statement early in 1913 there was a prosp that the cabbage crop in United States would be sh that Americans contracted v dealers in that country to sup the expected deficiency in sa kraut; and that these contra are now being filled.

How Parcels Post Prophecies Worked Out for Last Year's Prophets

At "Grocery World and General Merchant's" Request Retailers from All States Tell How Parcels Post Has Worked Out for Them After One Year.

About one year ago, just before the new parcels post law went into effect, the "Grocery World and General Merchant" asked retail merchants from all over the United States to predict what the effect of it would be, not only to their own business, but to the retail business generally. These predictions were furnished practically from every State in the Union and published just about one year ago. Some of them expected harm from the parcels post; some thought it would have no effect on the retail business; while a few expected actual benefit.

The parcels post has now been in force for slightly over one year and the "Grocery World and General Merchant" has asked the same retailers who prophesied last year to tell whether the thing has worked out the way they thought it would. Their letters follow:

VERMONT

The parcels post is putting the finishing touch on the merchant in a small place. This with free mail delivery. The farmer no longer has to come to town.

W. H. Cardell,
Bristol, Vt.

I do not think it hurt as much as we expected.

C. W. Barows,
Barton, Vt.

NEW YORK

Regarding the parcels post business will say that we find it very useful in our own business, but of course it is also the same with the mail-order houses. As I look at it, it seems the patrons of these houses are buying from them in small lots and using the parcels post where formerly they waited until they got a large order and then had it come by freight.

I do not think it has hurt us as much as we expected.

As the limit on the weight is now raised, I do not know how that part will work.

M. Niles & Son,
H. A. Niles,
Alfred Station, N. Y.

My principal objection to the proposed enlargement of our parcels post system was that I opposed the principle of carrying merchandise at a flat rate regardless of distance, and in my testimony before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I admitted that if a zone system could be worked out on proper lines I did not believe it would do any harm, and might be of benefit to both merchants and consumers.

So far as I have been able to observe, I don't think that merchants doing a local business have been injured much, nor do I think that the business of the large mail-order houses has been increased much on account of our new parcels post law, but, as I predicted in my testimony before the Senate Committee, mail-order houses have sprung into existence who have done quite a business by misrepresenting the kind of merchandise they were selling, and of course all the business which these mail-order houses have done has been taken from the local merchant, and I don't think that the consumer has been benefited.

While in most cases I expect the consumers received about what they were entitled to for their money, they were led to believe that they were going to receive a great deal more than they were entitled to, and while I don't think many of these consumers will continue to order from mail-order houses who misrepresent their wares, at the same time a considerable business has been done by this class of houses, and this business, of course, has been taken from local merchants.

The farmers of the country, who are perhaps more responsible than anyone else for this enlargement in our parcels post system, have not, in my judgment, been benefited, but I think if the Government can afford to give better rates in the local zone that perhaps the farmers will be benefited, and that a system may be perfected which will benefit the great majority of the people without entailing too great a loss upon the Government.

As regards parcels post, beg to state that we do not believe that the injury to us was what we anticipated it would be.

If any of our patrons were sending to the large mail-order houses for some merchandise, we are of the opinion that we more than made up the difference in the merchandise that we mailed out to those residing in the vicinity of our city.

In face of the business depression which every manufacturing city such as ours has suffered, we have maintained a satisfactory average of sales, and upon this we base our report.

As far as I can judge, the condition as to hurt remains the same. The fellow with ready cash, regardless of parcels post, is doing just as he always has done. He sends his money away when he has any to the cheapest market. When he has no money he cheerfully will take away all the merchandise the local dealer will let him have and never question the price.

On the other hand I think the parcels post is a distinct benefit to the local dealer, because it put a crimp in the outrage charges of the express compat for small packages, and I re believe that it would immeas ably benefit the whole countr the postal weights were increa to a hundred pounds or e more. Whilst this will benefit consumer it would correspondi ly benefit the dealer, for the vious reason that I stated in opening paragraph of this let that is, parcels post or no par post, a large percentage of pec will always imagine things cheaper when ordered away fr home.

I am still of the same opin as regards the parcels post pr osition that I was when I wr you on this subject about year ago.

I firmly believe that the gre est aid ever given to the la catalogue houses was when Government passed the par post law. There are of cours few cases where argument co be made that it helps the r consumers, but these cases indeed few.

Judging from the numer and frequent letters that I rece from the big catalogue hou also circulars and advertising other kinds that they are flood the mails with, these people fu realize the help that parcels p gives them. I notice the r carriers almost each morn when they leave the local p office and from the number parcels of quite large size t each carrier has for delivery would judge that the large m order concerns are reaping richer harvest of trade from consumers in the rural distri than ever before.

I cannot help but note the crease in sales of spices, flavor extracts, etc., these goods be light in weight. In my own st and in several cases upon inve gation, I find that some of th customers are ordering from catalogue houses via parcels po and to constantly keep the mails to each rural consumer flooded with literature calling attention in an attractive way to their goods. They haven't the capital to carry almost unlimited stocks of every conceivable goods made, known or grown for human beings to use; the expense of doing this would eat up nearly all of the profits if not quite all. This being the case, the large catalogue houses with their own printing plants, their own large office forces, with every known kind of office equipment for getting out cheap advertising, have a decided advantage over little fellows like myself. However I must admit that we have advantages too, especially I would mention the fact that we are right on the ground and come into personal contact with the trade, but everything considered, under the cheap transportation facilities offered by parcels post, the catalogue houses enjoy the advantage and they are using it to the best possible benefit.

I am led to believe that the law is being enforced in a very strict way here, at least this applies so far as any shipments via parcels post made by any of our local merchants. I believe that the incoming shipments of merchandise from the catalogue houses for delivery to patrons along the rural routes in this district far exceed, yes are more than double the outgoing shipments made from local merchants along the same routes, and this being the case, I am still compelled to believe that parcels post is hurtful to this community.

Cold Storage Egg Holders Expect Sharp Price Jump. Imports Fall Off of Rio and Santos Coffee. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

New York, January 15, 1914.

Holders of cold storage eggs are predicting a sharp jump in the prices of their holdings since the last report of the American Warehousemen's Association was given out, showing that the stock on hand is 503,200 cases less than that of a year ago. In the New York warehouses now there are only 413,400 cases, which is almost a low record. A year ago there were 916,600 cases in storage. Under favorable conditions some of the dealers say the quantity on hand might prove sufficient, but the slightest curtailment of the current receipts will send prices bounding upwards. The great majority of the eggs now in the warehouses are of May or later packing and the choicest of these have already been disposed of. The operators are figuring on unloading their stock before the end of January.

The report also shows that the supply of butter in storage is 10,000,000 pounds in excess of the stock on hand a year ago. Although the supply is so large, the dealers are not worrying, because the choice lots have all been disposed of and that now in storage is of the medium or poorer grades. During December about 2,000,000 pounds were withdrawn, showing the demand to be strong and leaving a total in storage of 36,498,800 pounds.

At the annual smoker and installation of officers of the New York Retail Grocers' Association last week, William H. Steinkamp, counsel for the organization, pointed out to the members that during the past year the charge that they were responsible for the high cost of living had been proven false by a great number of co-operative stores which had been established, only to find the cost of operation so high they were forced to close down. In part he said: "A year ago the high cost of living was the theme of discussion on the platform, in legislative halls and in the press. The middleman was blamed for it all. To prove this, co-operative stores and schemes without number were begun. They have all met with failure, because the cost of doing business was greater than anticipated and the truth has been forced home that the middleman is not only not to blame, but what is more, that the middleman is engaged against terrific odds for his mere existence. The middleman is more sinned against than sinning.

"We are living in a period when it is sought to remedy every real and imaginary evil by law. This is due mainly to the fact that the public has tired of being oppressed by the financially strong, who combine against it on one hand, and of being cheated by unscrupulous dealers on the other. For the protection of both the consumer and the honest retailer, it became necessary that many laws be passed. This would not have been necessary had all business men lived up to the Golden Rule."

The officers of the association, who had been re-elected, were installed with the usual ceremonies by Counselor Steinkamp. The attendance was excellent and many wholesale houses were represented.

In response to the strong protests made by Eastern dealers, the California Associated Raisin Co. has rescinded the ruling made early in December that on all purchases made to February delivery by March 1st, no distinction would be made between the 1912 and the 1913 crops. In the circular sent out by the company it was stated that after March 1st any of the 1912 crop still on hand which was not in perfect condition would be sent to the wineries. The protests caused the company to issue another notice this week, stating that the two crops would be listed separately and the old sold at prices considerably under the new crop.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Spot coffee showed a marked improvement this week, desirable grades of Santos being in strong demand. While the country has not abandoned its hand-to-mouth policy, the supply is only moderate and supplies must be replenished. The tone is firmer in sympathy with cables from Brazil. Mild coffees are being taken up, the demand for Bogatas and Maracaibos being good and prices a shade higher.

The tea market is quiet, but a steady jobbing inquiry from the country, together with the light stocks on hand, keep prices firm. The shipments received here are under below those of a year ago, so no effort is being made to press sales. Until the wholesale grocers have completed their inventories no active movement is expected.

Retailers Now Almost Agreed About Parcels Post.

A remarkable and interesting condition is shown in the letters published elsewhere over the names of retailers from every State in the Union. They were the same who at this journal's request, indulged in prophecy one year ago as to how parcels post would affect them. This was before it became operative. As we remember it, last year's letters divided themselves about in equal parts—one-half believed parcels post would harm the regular retailer and the other half believed it would not. A few believed it would have no effect at all.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" asked all these retailers, after one year had passed, to say whether their predictions had proven correct. The answers appear in this issue. Every one who believed beforehand that parcels post would do no harm to the retailer, still believes that, but all who believed that parcels post would harm the retailer, save one, now believes the contrary. In other words, retailers from all the States of the Union, with one exception, now agree that parcels post has not harmed them and will not harm them. A large number go even further—they believe parcels post is a positive business benefit to them.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" prophesied something like this before parcels post became operative, while the calamity howlers were working themselves into a frenzy over the death and disaster that parcels post was to bring to the regular retailer. The future effect of radical changes about to be made is almost always exaggerated, either in one way or the other, and sometimes in both.

Hope Now for Baked Beans.

The writer with other consumers of and dealers in baked beans, views with pleased appreciation the efforts of the United States Government to improve the quality of baked beans. Action is nowhere more sorely needed. The cheaper tinned baked beans of commerce, before the food laws began to get busy with them, were an outrage to every decent sense. Not all brands by any means, but almost all the cheaper brands. The cheapest beans possible to buy, culls, mouldy or rejected—stock that the packer, after seeing it, would no more give his children than he would give them swill. These were carelessly cooked in a way that represented a fearful travesty on real baked beans, and given a final insult by a hurried squirt of "tomato sauce," made from sour, stale or fermented pulp.

Everybody who knows anything about baked beans knows that this is a fair description of a large number of baked bean brands that have come on the market during the last ten years. Very often the packers who produced them did not like to, but packed, as one of them once said to the writer, "what was ordered." These goods are now illegitimate. The packer who packs and the dealer who sells them, will hereafter be violators of the law, and so they ought to be.

As to Too Many Stores.

For years this journal has contended that the main cause of most, if not all, the evils of the trade was the existence of too many stores. This operates in two ways: It raises the cost of distribution; and the desperate struggle for a livelihood which it induces leads merchants to do things which if not under stress they would not do.

The subject is also attracting other people's consideration. The writer's attention has been called to the following statement issued by Dr. J. S. Crumbine, secretary of the Kansas State Board of Health:—

> Every grocery store must support from two to five families, and the big stores even more. Each corner grocer must add to the cost of his goods enough to make a reasonable profit on his investment and enough more to pay his store costs. Rents, delivery wagons and horses and delivery men and clerks all cost a lot of money, and everything must bear its share of this cost before it reaches the hands of the consumers.
> In Topeka there are more than a hundred grocery stores and every Kansas town is in exactly the same relative condition, a store every three or four blocks. The average small grocery can serve about three or four hundred families, but in most towns the stores don't have that much business because of too many stores. It is nice and convenient to be able to run down to the store at any minute to get some thing for lunch or dinner, but costs money to have these conveniences.
> In Topeka a dozen stores properly located could attend to all the needs of the city. They would reduce the enormous overhead expenses that all the little corner groceries have to meet, and the cost of foodstuffs could be reduced just that much to the consumers. Few of the little stores are really profitable. They make a bare living.
> Most of the business failures in this State are the little corner groceries. They do not have enough business to make the profits necessary to meet this heavy overhead expense and pay a profit besides.

Most of what is said here, b as to premises and conclusions absolutely true. There are t many stores and the result is p cisely what Dr. Crumbine says is. Not only in Kansas, everywhere else.

The writer is sure, however, th neither in Topeka nor anywhe else, is there any such exce over actual needs as Dr. Cru bine thinks. Of over one hundr Topeka grocery stores, he sa eighty-eight are unnecessa This is scarcely believable. N turally, it depends on what means by necessary. He declar that "a dozen stores, properly cated, could attend to all t needs of the city." Very pro ably one store could attend everybody, after a fashion, but takes more than this to pro that all stores but one are u necessary. The chance is, ho ever, that one-third of the prese grocery stores could easily be di pensed with without harm to an body and benefit to all. This i cludes even the owners of t displaced stores.

The Cheapest Thing on the Market

Side by side with the commodities that are ruling high and growing more expensive, there is one that stays cheap, and if anything, is growing more cheap every day.

It is credit.

Did you read the story of Greenfield, Brown and Rotman, who were arrested recently by the Federal Government and brought to Philadelphia for fraud? These men, with a fourth, conducted a syndicate, or to speak truthfully in jest, a "skindicate," for the exploitation of their easily obtained credit. They bought all sorts of merchandise on credit, never expecting to pay for it, and went out among the retail trade and sold it far below the market. Naturally all they got was equal to money found, and it was said at first that they cleaned up nearly a million dollars in a few years. But listen to the story of the Government inspector who got the evidence against them:—

> The names of the victims of the three men would almost make a business directory. Big manufacturing corporations and some of the best-known jobbing houses in the country are among the victims.
> The operations of the men was a striking example of the inefficiency of the credit business in the United States. Some of the great firms of the nation, which pride themselves on the scientific efficiency of their credit system, were among the largest losers. In their eagerness to increase their business, these concerns extended credit to the alleged swindlers on the flimsiest of references. The whole success of the men was based on their knowledge of this inefficiency in business which is so widespread throughout the country.
> What the men did with the great amounts they are said to have stolen remains a mystery. It is estimated that they received at least a million dollars' worth of goods, which they did not pay for. They robably sold this at half price, ocketing a half-million in cash.

The three men had one scheme hich they are said to have used in ll their alleged swindles. They ent into a city and opened a jobing house, all taking assumed ames. Sometimes they would open wo houses, as they are said to have n St. Louis. When they had one ouse, they would order a small bill f goods and pay for it promptly. hen they would order much larger mounts and give the firm they had aid promptly as reference. In almost every case, this scheme orked, the manufacturers accepting unhesitatingly the flimsy reference of the first house.

When they had two concerns, one f them would pay promptly all its mall bills. Then the second concern would ask for large credit rom the manufacturers who had een supplying the first concern, iving their own first concern as eference. The first house would rite glowing accounts of the stability of the second and the victims, lmost without exception, would ive the credit asked and ship the oods.

It was the custom of the alleged vindlers to send a dray to the eight station and to load the shipent as soon as it arrived. Then ey would quickly change the labels and carry the goods to another ation, sending them to a distributing point in another city or to some ence" or auction house. Thus, the oods would never enter the vindlers' place of business at all, t would be disposed of as quickly they were received.

Brown is a clever salesman. hen the alleged swindlers ordered bill of goods he would go to retilers and offer them the goods at diculously low cash prices, in this manner disposing of them before they arrived. As soon as the goods arrived they would be transported to the retailers and the money collected. The men arranged to have all their shipments arrive at one time, so that they could be disposed of in a few days and the profits quickly taken. As soon as all the goods were disposed of they would draw all their money from bank and leave the city, going directly to another town and starting a new business there under different names.

Probably every victim in this case employs a credit man who is paid to protect the firm against occurrences of precisely this sort. Also, probably every victim subscribes to Dun's or Bradstreet's service and to the service of various trade associations that maintain credit departments. In spite of this, these three crooks get by with a sum said to represent a million dollars!

Why?

Because the press to do business is so irresistible that men forget caution. For a prospect of making a little money—moving some goods—getting a new customer on the books—they will take a chance.

Of course nothing can protect a business man from his own weak cupidity. If a man builds a stockade about him to keep himself inside, and then lets himself out of the gate with his own key, the stockade might reach to Heaven and it wouldn't keep him in.

It is a pity that these business houses have to lose all this money, but so is it a pity that any other gambler has to lose. Nobody has to lose money in bad debts. Let him not make them. Can he tell in advance whether a debt will be bad? In most cases he can come pretty close to it. At any rate, he can come a great deal closer than the victims in this case came.

Forbid Culls or Mouldy Beans in Baked Beans.

United States Department of Agriculture Gives Packers Notice to Above Effect. Also Forbids Bad Tomato Pulp in Baked Beans.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

Washington, D. C.,
January 16, 1914.

The Department of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Chemistry, has given notice to manufacturers of canned baked beans or pork and beans that it regards the practice of using "cull" or other beans which are mouldy, musty or otherwise decomposed in these products as manifestly contrary to Section 7, paragraph 6 of the Food and Drugs Act.

Notice is also given that the use of tomato sauce or pulp which is prepared from decomposed tomato or trimming stock in the preparation of baked beans or other food products with tomato sauce is also considered a violation of the law.

The section of the Food and Drugs Act referred to provides that an article shall be deemed to be adulterated in the case of "food * * * if it consists in whole or in part of a filthy, decomposed or putrid animal or vegetable substance, or any portion of an animal unfit for food, whether manufactured or not, or if it is the product of a diseased animal or one that has died otherwise than by slaughter."

Best Way to Calculate Profit.

Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 10, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please give me information on the following questions:—

What is the best or the most proper way to get at the net profit on goods after first cost on grocery goods sold?

A grocer will sell, say, $200 today. How do you get at the net profit? Reduce to 12 or 15 per cent., the balance to pay loss and other expenses?

Yours truly,
A READER OF YOUR PAPER.

Upon a specific case like one day's sales it would not be possible to get the net profit without actually figuring it out on every article sold. Some goods sold in a day will bear one percentage of profit, other goods will bear another. One day is scarcely long enough to enable a reliable average to be formed.

A merchant with the amount of a week's, or a month's, or three months' sales before him, ought to find it easy to tell how much his net profit has been. Opinions differ as to whether to calculate profit on the basis of cost price or on basis of selling price. More seem to be doing the latter, however, than the former. It makes no difference which plan is used if it be constantly remembered that to net a certain profit the fixed percentage, if levied on cost, must be larger than if levied on selling price. A merchant must decide in advance what it costs him to do business, and how much net profit he needs to make. These two items must obviously be added to the cost price of his goods to get his selling price. Therefore when he knows the amount of business he has done in a given period, all he needs to do is to multiply it by the percentage he has fixed upon his goods for profit, and he will have his net profit in figures.

There is a vast field for ser with the retailer and the jo and his salesman can give a g business uplift to his custo by rendering an intelligent s ice that will teach the custo business methods, salesman and many other things that e tually will lead to better re ing. Yours truly,

EVERY Housewife would rather buy mince meat than to undertake the long tedious process of making it if she could be sure of getting the same quality.

Armour's Veribest Mince Meat

is made from choicest fruits, meats and spices, as carefully prepared as in the home kitchen.

It is the generous amount of raisins, currants, apples and citron that makes home-made mince meat better than most of the manufactured product. Armour's Veribest Mince Meat is like that made at home—plenty of fruit, carefully selected and thoroughly cleaned—Muscatel and Sultana raisins, Grecian currants and imported citron. The meat used is prime beef, and the kidney suet is the best quality. The delightfully smooth blend, so noticeable in our Veribest Mince Meat, is the result of a special process we have perfected. All the spices thoroughly permeate the entire product, thereby eliminating any possibility of that bitter taste prevalent in some brands of mince meat.

is with pleasure that I reply our letter of December 5th to inform you that my sales he past year have been very factory, with an increase of ness of 25 per cent. over 1912. see no ill effect of parcels The country people in my tory have not taken advan- of parcels post, as most mer- ts would expect them to. do not mail their eggs, but- hams, etc., away, but bring to our market. As I pre- d in my letter to you one ago that local dry goods would feel the effect of par- post, I observe closely and many packages from mail- dry goods firms. We have gotten out quite a lot of special sales this year and made 5, 10 and 25-cent goods the leader. I'll tell you the fact, if country stores would push 5, 10 and 25-cent goods they would readily see their business begin to grow. About eight years ago I mailed your advertising critic my first 5 and 10-cent circular, about 9 x 12. Just from the effect of that little ad. I saw the possibilities of 5 and 10-cent business. My sales increased rapidly, and now we are doing 50 per cent. more business than when we started advertising. I am enclosing one of my Christmas sale bills so you can see what we are doing for 10 and 25-cent goods for the holidays.

Since the Postmaster-General has raised the weight limit to fifty pounds and reduced the rate of parcels post packages for zones one and two to take effect January 1, 1914, I think it will give country merchants a good chance to get a lot of trade that we couldn't get under the old rate. We are going to advertise extensively during 1914 and expect to have a good mail-order business.

I advise all country merchants to advertise so that we may keep the trade that legitimately belongs to us. I notice the daily papers are giving parcels post a good deal of publicity. They are working for the farmer and the city retailers, so we country merchants must look out for ourselves along this line. I have asked several merchants what trade journal do you take? They say "Aw! we don't take any trade journal; we take the daily paper and get the market on eggs and poultry, and the rest we don't worry about." I say every merchant should take one or more trade journals and read and study them. I take four and I sure do get my money's worth out of them. Not throwing any bouquets or meaning to boost any wholesale merchant, I have gotten more good and more business education out of Butler Brothers service department than I could have gotten even by experience.

So far as we are concerned we do not observe that parcels post is doing us any harm.

We think, however, that certain clothing concerns are spreading themselves in this section, particularly among the negroes, which of course is bound to take just that much from the people here who sell these goods. This class of business has been going on heretofore with the express companies, consequently the parcels post cannot be charged with it.

We cannot say that this business is increasing very much in our section as it has not come to our notice. We may make inquiries later on and advise you as to how it's affecting other merchants.

There has nothing come to my notice since writing you one year ago to cause me to change my mind in regard to parcels post and the ordinary retailer. I come in close touch with retailers who are quick to air their grievances, but have not heard a single complaint.

I believe the live country storekeeper can benefit greatly if he is alive to present conditions. I know of one storekeeper in the country who is picking up a large business in wall paper and doesn't carry a single roll in stock, and at the same time makes his deliveries just about as quickly as though he carried several hundred dollars' worth, or for that matter many thousands in stock. He has four sample books and sells his paper from them. If he takes an order to-day he immediately mails it to the New Wall Paper Co., Scranton. If it is mailed before 2 P. M. it is packed and mailed to the purchaser next morning and delivered that day at most—not later than the next morning—thus an order placed on Tuesday will be delivered at the farmer's home on Wednesday or Thursday, the country storekeeper is put to no expense for delivery, and deliveries are prompt.

The same thing applies in many other lines. I believe parcels post will help the merchant who is wide-awake.

Yours of 5th inst. at hand and in answer would say that I can't see where the parcels post law has affected my business. The parcels post has had no appreciable effect here in changing the current of business. But why should it so long as rates are fair according to weight and distance?

Here is the situation in a nut shell: The express companies have a new competitor in the person of the United States. As a result of this we may get better service and cheaper rates. How could that circumstance eliminate or substitute any middleman, or in any other way change the commercial status quo?

I was recently amused by an article from our Postmaster-General in the "Saturday Evening Post." According to that aritcle the parcels post was bringing the producer and consumer face to face and eliminating the middleman. On reading that article a traveler from Mars would conclude that modern transportation and distribution had just been invented and introduced by the Post Office Department. As a matter of fact, every well informed man knows that there is no change in transportation methods. The producer is as far as ever from the consumer. The middlemen needed last year are needed n

$1,000,000, which will be increased from time to time as the operating plans of the company are developed. J. S. Crutchfield is president, C. M. Murray, vice-president, and Allen Murdoch, secretary and treasurer. The location of the Pittsburg headquarters for the operation of the company was a material factor in the selection of three Pittsburgers as the principal officers. The company will buy, lease or assume a majority interest in fruit and vegetable producing properties in all sections of the country. The policy and plan are new in so far as the company will engage in no development work, but will acquire only established, producing properties. It is proposed to procure apple producing orchards in New York and New England, citrus fruit groves in Florida, Porto Rico and California and other fruit and vegetable producing property in all sections of the United States.

The experience of those comprising the directorate can be illustrated by the fact that H. R. Heitman recently marketed 10,000 boxes of grapefruit in one shipment for $49,000 net at the shipping point and his total shipments for the season aggregated more than 100,000 boxes. With the combined selling and producing experience of the directorate it is expected that the headquarters of this company in Pittsburg will mean the clearing of not less than $10,000,000 a year through the Pittsburg banks.

Some time ago the Industrial Development Commission compiled figures and prepared a map showing that the Pittsburg produce distributing district and the territory depending upon Pittsburg for supply, comprised 40,000 square miles, 5,000,000 persons and dispensed $30,000,000 worth of produce each year. These figures, supplemented by details, were influential in securing for Pittsburg the headquarters of this new enterprise.

It is worthy of note that no large mercantile establishment in Pittsburg failed during 1913, a fact due, no doubt, to the wise conservatism of wholesalers and jobbers in the matter of extending credits and holding in check small dealers who were inclined to stock up on lines they could not dispose of promptly.

Pittsburg is largely a consuming center in so far as food products are concerned. Recent high prices have stimulated gardening on nearby farms, but the product from these is but a drop in the bucket to the volume brought in here from distant points. This city is the third largest distributing center in the United States for fruits and vegetables brought from distant points. Many large towns in Eastern Ohio, West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania make Pittsburg their base of operations because the railroads give these towns special rates as an inducement to jobbers to buy here. All towns within a radius of 105 miles of Pittsburg get these rates. Receipts of country produce at this point during 1913 aggregated about 50,000 c This estimate does not take account poultry, butter, chees eggs, lines closely allied with country produce business.

The distribution of butter on a large scale greatly in ex of 1912 despite the higher pri Dealers in oleo report their b ness has grown because the c sumer has learned to eat it.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. Sweeney, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

Talk Macaroni.—It's the season for it. Open a package of it and lay it on blue paper. It's the golden flat kind—made by a new process that does away with that pastry taste. Bring out your 5-cent tins of tomato paste, or Italian sauce, as it's called, and be sure to have a few bottles of Parmasen cheese around.

The Best Man.—Are you the best salesman in your store? If you aren't, why? Being the best man is the thing that counts. The secret is work. If you aren't the best man, try to be just as good as the fellow who is, and then there will be two good men instead of one best; that will be better for you and the store, too. Sometimes the best fellow leaves for another place and then the next best steps in his shoes. Let that be you. It's easy. A good definition of the boss would be to say that he is the man at the head of the store who appreciates this kind of effort on the part of the boys.

Look Ahead.—What do you intend to be? What have you determined to be? The two go hand in hand. A man succeeds, or almost succeeds in becoming what he wants to become. The fellow who is satisfied to hold a low position all his life naturally gets just what he is trying for, and doesn't get anything else. The man who determines and plans to become a leader in his line is bound to be a "good one," at least, before he is through. You must aim high if you want to shoot high. If you point the gun of ambition at the ground you will shoot down out of sight and never strike anything worth while.

"I Don't Know."—There are times when that is the only thing you can say honestly, but it always should be followed by, "but I'll find out." Don't answer questions without knowing what you are talking about, because you'll make trouble by that nine times out of ten. When you don't know anything acknowledge it frankly, because ignorance is a condition, not a crime. The only crime is to be content to remain ignorant. Therefore find out, and when you say "I don't know, but I'll find out," you are on the road to help both customer and yourself. Customers always expect this attitude in a new clerk. But don't forget what I said about the point at which ignorance becomes a crime. Study. Ask questions. Get posted. Be the dictionary of facts about your goods and you will soon be the salesbook of progress in the store.

The Personality Dream.—If you have made yourself so agreeable to people that these people persist in having you take their order, be glad of it, but don't foolishly decide to make capital out of this popularity. Many a good fellow went down and out because he thought he controlled the trade.

You have seen it in the case of a new drummer succeeding an old one. You have seen it where cl started business for themsel You've seen it, too, many a t where a clerk was hired by a c petitor because he "knew" he c carry over to that store fifty tomers in good standing. It's very well to make a change if change looks like a real adva but in doing so don't make breaks about the trade that is ing to follow you.

Go on your merits as a sales and a worker.

This "personality" business or may not apply to other li but the writer does know that in grocery business that store itsel the personality.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Grocery World and General Merchant" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

What Kind of a Roaster Ought a Small or Moderate-sized Grocer to Use in Doing His Own Coffee Roasting?

By William B. Harris.

fter the grocer has deter-ed to do his own roasting, the question to be decided is as ne kind of an outfit to secure. s always advisable in connec- with the installation of ma-ery to find out just exactly t the market has to offer, and make such selections as the er in his opinion is satisfied best meet his require-ts.

here are four concerns manu-uring machinery of this de-tion, including coffee roast-separators, milling ma-es, and all other appliances onnection therewith. These erns will furnish catalogues estimates if the grocer will describing the location of store, and state whether he gas and electricity available. here the machine is used as re fixture, a gas roaster is rable, as it is easier to handle cleaner than where any other is used. The dealer will need fficient gas supply for gen-ng heat under the cylinder he will also need electricity perating the machine.

ere is then the capacity of oaster to be considered. Ma-s are manufactured having acity of ten pounds per roast over. The ten-pound ma- is of course the least ex-ve so far as the initial in-ent is concerned. It is a good advertising asset and out a good product, but e the dealer does a coffee ess of any moment, he will that it takes considerable roasting his coffees in such quantities to keep his can-filled with the different s, particularly if he puts out or more grades.

Some dealers have preferred to start with the ten-pound roaster in order to make certain that the plan would prove successful. Later on these small roasters have usually been exchanged for the twenty-five-pound or half bag size.

In the next article it is proposed to list the cost of the various roasting outfits suitable for the average retail store. That article will be followed by another giving as far as possible the installation and operating expenses, after which it is proposed to touch upon the technical points of roasting by the retail dealer. This series of papers is of course merely a general outline in many respects. The actual cost of the machine can be stated, but the cost of installation would vary in almost every instance.

In listing the names of manufacturers of coffee roasting machinery they will be found mentioned in alphabetical order.

Jabez Burns & Sons, 600 West 43d street, New York City, are probably the largest manufacturers of coffee roasting machinery in the country. Their specialty is laying out and equipping large plants and their large two-bag coal or gas cylinders are to be seen in almost every large city. They also manufacture a small roaster which they list as No. 9, capacity fifteen pounds. It will be found on page 88 of their catalogue. The next machine in point of capacity is their No. 7, listed on page 80 of their catalogue, and having a half bag capacity. Their No. 6, listed on page 76 of their catalogue, has a capacity of one bag.

The A. J. Deer Co., Hornell, N. Y., equip retail stores with roasters of small capacity. These machines are manufactured in the following sizes:—

Style No. 1 having a capacity of ten pounds.

Style No. 4 having a capacity of fifteen pounds.

Style No. 5 having a capacity of twenty-five pounds.

Style No. 6 having a capacity of seventy-five pounds.

Style No. 7 having a capacity of one hundred and fifty pounds.

The Huntley Manufacturing Co., Silver Creek, N. Y., has made a standard machine of merit for a number of years. Their style No. 0 roaster is an outfit having a capacity of fifteen pounds to forty pounds. Their style No. 1 roaster is an outfit having a capacity from twenty-five to eighty pounds. These machines are carefully manufactured and have given satisfaction wherever they have been installed.

The Lambert Machine Co., Marshall, Mich., has not as yet turned out the smaller size machines, confining their business to the sizes which they list as No. 5 Class "C," having a capacity of half a bag, and No. 3 Class "C," having a capacity of one bag. This concern also turns out a machine for manufacturing peanut butter which has been used to great advantage in connection with their roasting outfit. Dealers are not only roasting coffee, but peanuts, and in connection with this latter product selling the peanuts both shelled and unshelled, besides manufacturing peanut butter, for which during recent years there has been an increasing demand.

All of the above concerns will give any information that the dealer may desire as to the entire cost of installing a roasting plant such as he may be interested in securing.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market remains absolutely unchanged for the week. Business is fair for the season, all new teas steadily maintained. Old teas are getting well cleaned up, with the exception of Japans, of which there is still a surplus. Prices, however, are not as easy as they would otherwise be, because of the shortage in new teas.

Coffee.

The coffee market shows an improvement in all grades of Rio and Santos to the extent of ¼ to ½ cent per pound. Reduction in receipts and increased general buying are responsible. Everybody seems to feel a little more confidence in the market, but there is no safe prophesying what the coffee market will do. Mild coffees are steady to firm at unchanged prices; fair demand. Mocha very scarce and high. Java unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

Sugar is quite soft, although there has been no quotable decline during the week. Raws are showing more firmness, however, and slight advances, though this will probably be only temporary. The demand for refined sugar is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged. Compound syrup is in fair seasonable demand. Sugar syrup and molasses are dull and unchanged.

Fish.

Fish is dull. There is a fair demand for mackerel, at ruling prices. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and in moderate demand; market is strong. Salmon unchanged and quiet. Domestic sardines are firmly held on account of scarcity, demand quiet. Imported sardines all very firm and high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are held steadily on last week's quotation, with a fair demand only. Considering the actual cost of production, tomatoes are cheaper than for years. A few packers have offered futures at 75 cents, but nobody is interested. Corn and peas unchanged throughout and in fair demand. Apples firmer because of the high prices of fresh apples; demand fair. California canned goods show no change and quiet demand. Small Eastern canned goods seasonably active and steady to firm because of light stocks. String beans especially are very high.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change; demand is moderate, but market steady. There has been a large foreign demand, and holders expect the supply to clean up. Peaches and apricots unchanged and quiet. Raisins in fair demand at ruling prices. Currants and other dried fruits dull.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are unchanged, steady and in fair demand. Marrows are also steadily maintained, in most holders' hands, although there have been a few offers of stock below the market. California limas are selling in a small way at unchanged prices. Manchurian beans, coming into the country via the Pacific Coast at a reduced tariff, may become a factor. They are offered at a considerable reduction below domestic beans. There is said to be danger of a destructive fly being present in them, however.

Butter.

The receipts of fresh butter have increased somewhat, but the consumptive demand is only fair. The result has been a decline of 2 to 3 cents per pound for the week, both as to solids and prints. The decline has stimulated the demand to some extent, and the market is firm, with the surplus cleaned up. Storage butter is in ample supply, and the consumption is not as good as holders would like.

Eggs.

The consumptive demand for eggs is reported good and the receipts are cleaning up daily. The demand for foreign eggs has raised the price, and importations have therefore fallen off somewhat. The recent cold has stimulated the demand and from all of these causes the market has advanced 3 to 4 cents. Milder weather is coming, however, and with it will probably come a decline in prices.

Cheese.

The cheese market shows no change. The consumptive demand is normal for the season and stocks are reported light. The market is healthy on the present basis and no change seems in sight.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady at unchanged prices, with only a moderate consumptive demand. Pure lard is moving better, and the market is firm. Compound lard is also firm at unchanged prices. Dried beef is in a little better supply and good demand. Barreled pork and canned meats dull and unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple situation remains unchanged, with prices slightly in buyer's favor. Prime quality, in 50-pound boxes, is quotable to-day at 7⅝ to 7¾ cents in carload lots, and for fair grades these prices would probably be shaded a little. Cold storage stock is bringing the same price, and the quality is somewhat cleaner than this season's pack. Higher grades are still bringing up to 12 cents for fancy.

Raspberries are steady at 23 to 23½ cents per pound f. o. b. in barrels.

Standard Canned Goods.

Apropos of tomatoes, those who pinned their faith to the belief that the opening of the new year would witness some improvement in the market prices feel much encouraged because of the developments during the last two weeks. The small increase in the buying of tomatoes in December has grown, in an orderly fashion, until the market has again become fairly active, and nearly everyone interested in them is beginning to feel that perhaps the goods have some intrinsic value after all. The market movements in tomatoes, as to prices, always run to extremes in seasons of unusual activity, and when the reaction comes the swing is likely to go too far the other way. Not that any bullish reaction is liable to o in the first half of 1914, but the unexpected that happen that article, and the marke well worth following closely.

The volume of business last week in the tomato ma here was certainly larger anyone expected so early in month, and the outlook for week is encouraging. The bu orders came from nearly all tions, and the average siz them was much larger tha the month previous, besides more numerous. The buyin the No. 2 size tins increased ficiently to cause an advanc 2½ cents per dozen in them, the No. 3 standards are not to buy at the low price of weeks ago. The weather has been cold enough to inte with the safe movement of goods and, as a matter of there has been no freezing perature experienced here a this winter. Every order called for immediate shipm and that is the best characte buying, the goods being wa for prompt consumption. Sell Franklin Carton Sugar by the Container

Your customers know what sugar is and what it will do, and expect to keep on buying it and eating it as long as they live. The right thing to do when a woman asks for sugar is to sell her a SUPPLY instead of SAMPLE—sell her a WHOLE CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR instead of one or two CARTONS.

It's easy to show a woman the convenience of having a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the house, always handy when she needs it.

Selling FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR by the CONTAINER is not only a convenience for your customers, but it saves you money, because you make one delivery instead of dozens. It gives you a wholesale outlet at a retail profit—you don't have to even open the CONTAINER to make your profit on every CARTON in it. When you sell a woman a CONTAINER of 30 two-pound CARTONS you make the profit on her purchases of sugar for some time to come; if you sell her one CARTON you leave an opening for competitors to sell her the other TWENTY-NINE. Lots of your customers buy flour by the barrel, potatoes by the bushel, canned goods by the dozen—it just as easy to sell them FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR BY THE CONTAINER. Try it.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is packed 24, 48, 60 and 120 pounds to the CONTAINER. Ask your Jobber for full information as to grades.

Scranton (Pa.) Weights and Measure Sealer Finds Half Weights, Scales and Measures Short.

Out of 5,127 Examined, 1,565 Were so Short They Had to be Destroyed, and 942 More Were Short but Could be Adjusted. Only Milk Jars Were All Correct.

In many of the counties of Pennsylvania there are official sealers of weights and measures actively prosecuting their duties. In other counties, including Philadelphia County, sealers have not been appointed, but will be very shortly.

The only report we have so far seen is that of the inspector who is covering the retail stores of Scranton, Pa. This official has just rendered his first annual report. He found scales that defrauded the consumer and some that defrauded the dealer who was using them. Ice scales were found short fifteen pounds on fifty, and dry measures were found that were 5 to 20 per cent. short. Following is the official report of inspectors covering every measuring or weighing device used in retail stores: —

The weights, scales and measures showing under "condemned" were confiscated and destroyed. In addition, 942 were also short, but were capable of being adjusted.

Sugar Reaches Low Price Level.

Retailers Selling Granulated at 3½ Cents and Jobbers as Low as 3.90, Though They Are Higher Now. Lowest Prices Since 1860, Outside Period in '90's. Granulated Prices for Fifty Years.

Refined sugar, meaning granulated, has become more of a football during the last few weeks than has been the case for years. Many retailers in this section have been selling it at 4 cents per pound, mainly the chain stores, and in South Jersey a few retailers have been cutting it to 3½ cents.

The wholesalers have also been selling sugar cheap, and several have within the week been selling as low as 3.90 and 3.95 cents per pound. The sales by reason of the cut prices are reported large. One South Jersey chain store is said to have sold seven barrels in one day at 3½ cents per pound.

These figures establish a new record for refined sugar prices. With the exception of a period during 1894, 1895 and 1896, prices now or very recently ruling on sugar are the lowest since 1860. Here is a most interesting compilation of sugar prices for every year since 1860:—

Pittsburg, Pa.,
January 15, 1914.

Figures compiled from shipping reports during 1913 show that in the Pittsburg produce distributing district there was an increase of more than 2,500 cars of shipments over the preceding year and reaching to a total of exceeding 50,300 cars for the year. The total value of the year's trade is more than $30,000,000. These figures were compiled by the Pittsburg Industrial Development Commission after its annual survey of the extent of the shipments in twelve months ending December 31st. Pittsburg stands third among the cities of America as a center for the distribution of fruits and vegetables. Within a radius of about 10 miles Pittsburg supplies 5,000,000 persons with produce.

C. L. Grabill, of Lancaster, Pa., sends in an advertising calendar which he used around the holidays. It was evidently made—and very poorly made—by the town printer, and has an exceedingly crude look. There are thousands of calendars sent out during the holidays, many of them works of art, and every one has to compete with every other. If we send out a poor one it is certain to be noticed and reflect upon us. The Lancaster Printing Co., whose name I notice on this calendar, may be able to do ordinary printing well enough, but they do not know how to put classy calendars together, and they ought not to try.

This calendar was printed on white cardboard 11 x 14 inches. Around the main side was a border of trading stamps, which Mr. Grabill describes in his advertising as red trading stamps, but which are printed on the calendar in light brown ink. Another illustration of the intelligence of the printer. Inside the border appear cuts of various premiums given for red trading stamps, and inside of that is the calendar, the pages of which also bear advertising matter. Here is a reduced photograph of the main side of this calendar.

FIRE ALARM ON THE REVERSE SIDE

Referring again to the first side of this calendar, I repeat that it is badly printed and looks exceedingly cheap and home-made. No printer has a right to turn out such a job as this, that is, not unless Mr. Grabill went to a printer he knew was second-class and cheap. In that case the printer may have done the best his facilities allowed him to. Everything about this side of the job is poor. Even the wire staples that fasten the calendar to the card are put in unevenly. As this is a trading stamp advertisement, however, it does not follow that the inferiority of the printing will prevent it from getting results. People are so thirsty for premiums that they would probably be keen over an advertisement printed on toilet paper with a rubber stamp. There is some real advertising on this calendar, printed on the leaves of the calendar itself—reminders, such as of seeds on the March slip, lime on the April slip, preserving glassware on the June slip, and so on. This is good, and if the calendar is hung up and used, might be depended on to do some good. I am not at all sure, however, that this calendar will be hung up and used. People like handsome calendars, even in their kitchens. Certainly this endar would never in the w be hung up anywhere but in kitchen, and it is so easy to handsomer ones that in a g many cases I am afraid it wo not even be used there. For Mr. Grabill can blame his prin What he should do, I think, w he comes to issue another ca dar, is to connect with some calendar concern that sells ca dars in blank. Let him buy t and have some good printer ish them.

Baking Powders That Leaven Your Stock

In a way, the baking powder that a grocer puts forward leavens his whole stock. Look at his leading brand and you can pretty well tell what his whole stock is like.

The grocers who put Rumford Powders forward are always fine, substantial merchants, for the people who use Rumford Powders are apt to be fine, substantial people. Rumford Powders are splendid merchandise from every standpoint; they are clean, wholesome combinations of food substances (phosphates, starch and soda), and they always do their work of leavening beautifully.

What a Great Store This Would Be

¶ If a grocer could fill his stock with goods as different from the mass as Private Estate Coffee is different from the common package brands of coffee, he would have a store so distinctive that people would come to it as a show place.

¶ There is enormous selling strength in novelty, and there is irresistible selling strength in it when novelty is coupled with superior quality. Private Estate Coffee is an unusual Mexican blend, packed in one-pound burlap bags that have no counterpart on the market. The coffee is good, the package is good—the whole proposition is a good way to escape the sober level of monotony that most package coffee represents, and to sell more coffee.

CCXLII.—False Statements as a Basis of Credit.

Over in New Jersey they have just arrested a large canned goods packer on the charge that by false statements about his financial standing, he induced several banks to loan him money. Shortly after making these statements, and getting these loans, he went into bankruptcy, and his financial condition was shown to be much worse than he had represented it to be. The packer in question comes of a well-known and very respectable family, and has held a high place in his town. To-day he is under bail as a defendant in a criminal action. The incident has a point for every reader hereof, which I propose to make in this article.

There are many chances to tell untruths in business, but the falsehood—sometimes it is only an exaggeration—that seems easiest to tell is the lie about one's own financial status when credit is being asked for. A business man, let us say, needs credit—in fact, must have it—and he is asked by his prospective creditor for a statement. Or his creditors may be pressing him, and he may be fighting to get more time, when also he is asked for a detailed statement of assets and liabilities. In both these cases, especially in the second, business men, generally the soul of honor, are constantly inflating values, or over-estimating them, so that the statement they furnish of their financial worth is not at all a truthful one, though they have not wilfully infused any fraud into it.

A recent case transpired in my own experience. The creditors of a client were pressing him. If he was sued at once, everybody he owed would come down on him and ruin would follow. He contended that if given time he could pull out, and also said that his assets were more than his liabilities. The most pressing creditor had asked him for a statement and upon the reception which that got would probably depend his future.

He prepared the statement and brought it to me. It showed a net worth, after all debts were paid, of about $6,000. He contended in the most positive way that it was correct throughout; he was willing to swear to it, and so on and so on.

In five minutes, without the exercise of any remarkable acumen, I uncovered three holes in this statement which reduced the assets so that he was actually insolvent by about $1,000. The poor fellow had been so anxious to make a good showing that without the slightest fraudulent intent, he had inflated his estimates of three items of assets way beyond all reason. The law allows a certain exaggeration in matters of that kind, but there is a limit beyond which exaggeration becomes falsehood, and the client referred to had passed it. The point of the case is that if he had taken his statement to his creditors, and on the strength of it had obtained further credit or further extensions, he could have been prosecuted for false pretense as soon as the creditors discovered the holes which I had discovered.

Moral, every business man who gives anybody a statement of his financial affairs should be enormously careful to see that it contains no exaggerations whatever—nothing that can afterward rise to plague him. To-day not only the civil courts of the States and of the Federal Government, but the Post Office Department as well, are especially alert to punish business men who deceive creditors, either past, present or prospective, by false statements of financial worth.

What is false pretense in such a case? Here is a definition: where a man makes a false statement which he knows to be false, or could know to be false, about a material matter, to another person who believes it and relies upon it to his own loss. This precisely covers a case where John Smith, retailer, says to William Jones, jobber, "I am worth $10,000 clear of everything; therefore give me a line of credit," where the fact is that Smith is worth nothing tangible above his liabilities, and the $10,000 he speaks of is all in gold mining stock that everybody has long since given up expecting to get anything from. It covers any case in which a business man compiles a statement which is not an accurate picture of his real condition. I know some business men, not large ones either, who are so fearful of making a mistake in this matter that when it becomes necessary to make a statement of their assets and liabilities they call in an accountant or an expert bookkeeper and leave it to him. Even if the accountant makes mistakes, the fact that he had been employed at all would —unless there was collusion—be a complete defense to a charge of false pretense.

One place where financial statements which have not been carefully checked by the maker almost always fall down is in the value of book accounts. Every business man who sells on credit has accounts receivable, and they represent a certain value. Some are good—worth their face; as to others there is a chance of collection, while others are completely worthless. The owner of book accounts has a right to look on the bright side of them up to the reasonable limit of pro ity, but he has no right to yond that. I remember i case a jobber had given his itors a statement in which accounts figured largely. I were worth anywhere near he said they were, he might right, but if they had to b down to any extent, his des ity as a risk would likely fa low the standard.

One of the accounts rece in this case was for about against a former customer had had a paralytic stroke years before, had lost every and had gone to live with a On the surface it appeared worth nothing, but the who was asking credit for i tended that it was good be the debtor was an honest and "if he lived would pay

If any material number of accounts which one figures sets, and asks credit o strength of, are like this, fraud without a doubt, fo thing goes beyond the lin hope and belief, and be either idiotic or fraudulent geration. The thing to do in a case is to decide every against yourself.

Here's Another Good Scheme.

I don't know whether you fellows have ever thought how plumb easy it is nowadays for a cheat to get away with it, but it seems to me it's easier to-day than it ever was before.

I don't give a ding what kind of a cheat it is either—it may be a consumer buying from you, or it may be a retailer buying from me or my boss. If he's built to put up a good bluff—it wouldn't have to be so awful good—he can sting us every time.

And what's worse, he's doing it, believe me.

I'll bet I can go into any retail store to-day, grocery or hardware or dry goods—now I'll take that back, I don't know as I could, for I can't put up the front some of 'em can, but I'll pick a fellow who will. I'll send him in anywhere, big or little, and he'll sting 'em all without turning a hair. If he wears good clothes and knows how to talk, he'll get all the credit he can eat—and he may not own the collar on his neck.

The average retailer—take it from me, this is true—will be scared to ask him whether he owns real estate or what his job is. His good clothes will get him through nine times out of ten. Yes, ninety-nine out of a hundred.

There ain't so many doing this out of the whole bunch of people, when you think of it, and when it's so easy this shows that we're pretty blamed honest. Ain't that right?

It's the same way, but not quite so bad, when a retailer comes to buy goods of a jobber. The jobber does look into it more, and a lot of 'em pay some fellow good money to do that alone. But they get stung in a whole heap of cases, and they could get stung in blamed near all if everybody was crooked.

I'll tell you the way they work. A retailer named Jones, we'll say, buys stuff from a jobber named Smith for maybe six months. Oh, he wouldn't have to do it that long—say three months. He pays prompt for everything, maybe he even discounts. He wouldn't have to discount, though, if he pays in thirty days that's enough.

By and by when the scheme's ripe, Jones starts to open up a new line of credit with another jobber—Brown—and gives Smith as reference. Of course Smith says he's all O. K.—he is. From that time on it's like taking candy from a blind baby. Jones can sting the feet off both Smith and Brown, and you can't touch him.

The way I dope it out is, that they bank too much on thinking that a man that pays his bills once is always going to pay 'em again. A lot of crooks pay bills once just so they can run up more bills that they can steal.

I'll tell you, there's so blamed much competition—all of us want customers so—that we take chances we wouldn't take if it wasn't for that. But don't forget this, the fellow that sells on credit has always got to take a chance, unless the customer gives him some kind of security, which customers don't need to do yet. Why you can't even tell whether your own father is going to be able to pay you!

I have a scheme that will fix the whole thing when I get to Congress. I'm going to have a law passed—it'll be a cinch—clapping you and me in jail if we sell to anybody except for cash, or on security. Holy Mike, what a comfort that would be, wouldn't it? No more lying awake at nights worrying about the money out on the books—everything paid on time right up to scratch—by George, it woul Heaven!

I'm thinking some of my Every once in a while I get a from the house that one of customers is late on his last Maybe he owes for a couple. up to me to dig in and find why—peach of a job! Gee, I hate it! Only the other da was put up to me to do this a fine fellow. I did it and this: He said: "I simply ha got the money. It's out on books and I can't get it in. T people are just getting Christmas and they have noth If I push them I'll lose t Most of it's as good as whe it'll all come in. But if people can't wait, tell them t ahead."

Fine! Beautiful! Great! W did I do? I put it up to my h to wait, and that's what they' They'll wait another thirty and then they'll go at him a and maybe he'll pay somet on account and work it out way. It's a bum way of d business—bum for the cust and bum for us. The thing is to fix the retailer so he w trust his goods out except cash or security, and to mak do that too.

There ain't a bit of doubt a that. THE STROLL

Retail Grocers Should Go After Peddlers

Correspondent Says They Are Stealing Some of Retailer's Most Profitable Trade. Laws Should be Passed in All States Taxing Peddlers. Some States Have Such Laws, But Not Many.

We desire to call your attention to one of the most potent evils which confronts the grocery and general store trade in the United States to-day.

We refer to the peddlers, or, rather, to the houses which run wagons throughout the country, small towns and cities, selling from these wagons direct to the consumer the profitable goods which the grocer and general merchant formerly handled. We refer to such things as spices, flavoring extracts, household drugs, tapioca, toilet soaps and similar goods, leaving the merchant to sell the heavy staples which carry little or no profit.

We know of communities in the country in which the general merchant has practically been driven out of business by these peddlers, and of others in which the grocer is simply eking out an existence due to the same cause.

There are a number of concerns in the country who have made enormous fortunes, and who do business running into millions of dollars per year, by selling from wagons direct to the consumer this profitable class of goods which the grocery and the general merchandise storekeeper should be selling.

They not only rob the local merchant of his business, but leave him to bear the expense of the up-keep of roads, schools, sewerage, and the manifold expenses of county, town and city government, while these parasites contribute nothing, and bear no share of the burden.

These houses ship any kind of goods they please to their men, and they in turn palm them off on the unsuspecting consumer. They can do this with impunity as the goods are not subject to the inspection of the State and National Pure Food and Drugs authorities, there being no way in which they can be gotten at, as there is no one in the transaction outside of the house which puts up the goods and its man who takes them in his wagon and sells and delivers them direct to the ultimate consumer.

They are not exposed for sale in wholesale houses or the stores of the legitimate merchant where they can be gotten at by the authorities.

Why is it these people can sell a package of pepper weighing 3 ounces or less for 10 cents, when the merchant gives 3½ ounces?

Why is it they can sell mustard weighing 3¼ ounces for 10 cents, when the merchant gives 3½ ounces and other spices in the same ratio for the same price?

Why is it they are allowed to sell as vanilla extract a mixture of vanillin and coumarin, costing about $1.50 a gallon to manufacture, when the merchant is selling absolutely pure extract of vanilla, the manufacture of which costs $8 a gallon, at the same price they are getting for their cheap and shoddy goods?

This evil is growing, and unless measures are taken to offset it the time is not far distant when the retail grocer and general merchant will find their most profitable business taken from them.

These peddlers ought, at least, be put on the same plane as the merchant with whom they are competing, and a remedy for the condition will be a tax such as is levied in a number of States on this class of business.

The remedy is plain: see that a license tax of at least from $200 to $300 is put upon every peddler's wagon selling goods, especially if imported into your State, that operates in your county, town or city, so that the peddler will be placed upon the same basis as yourself; and that every dollar's worth of goods he sells bears the same expense that every dollar you sell carries. Then see that the law is enforced. Even with the tax proposition equalized he will be getting more for his money than you, because he uses the roads continually and you use them occasionally; he does no jury duty and bears none of the burden of citizenship.

Think this over and write a strong letter to your Representative and Senator in the Legislature, putting the matter before them plainly, and tell him that you want a law passed which will give you protection.

The Legislatures of the following States are in session, and bills along lines suggested should be offered in such of them as do not have peddlers' laws:—

Rhode Island, New York, Virginia, South Carolina, Louisiana, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maryland, Mississippi, Georgia, Kentucky.

We know that Virginia has such a law, but it is not properly enforced, although one enterprising grocer in Southwestern Virginia was active in having same enforced with mostly advantageous results to his community.

Just a word more: See that consumers in your neighborhood understand that these houses and the representatives who sell goods direct to the consumer are not giving them a fair equivalent for their money, nor are they selling them at a lower price than you because, while they may offer one or two things for a bait, taking their line through, you can and do sell the housewife at a cheaper price in actual dollars and cents, besides giving her a much higher quality of goods, and that when the farmer or the local resident in your community gets in trouble, he does not go to these people for help (he cannot go to them, they are away and gone), but he goes to you, who in the language of the street are compelled "to come across."

To Cure Depressed Dried Peach Industry.

The California fruit interests are beginning to investigate the depressed condition of the dried peach industry, and there is talk of a combination similar to the raisin combination. A San Francisco paper speaking for the fruit interests puts it as follows:—

> The dried peach industry is certainly in a bad way and it ought to be recognized and good counsel taken as to the best way to im it. Peaches are being bought low as 3½ cents a pound, and bu ers are hard to find at any pri The San Joaquin growers are an ious to organize on the plan of t Raisin Exchange, or if that be i possible, on that of the Cured Fr Exchange. They do not, howev seem willing to use the organizati of the Cured Fruit Exchange—wh we do not know. What they d sire is that the Raisin Exchan shall take on the duty of marketi peaches, to which, however, t trustees of the exchange will r agree. The trouble is that there a too many peaches. For some re son consumers do not take to the kindly, and retailers will buy the only very gingerly. They are pr duced in large quantities in ma parts of the country, and even in r gard to California peaches, which a much the best produced, any "hol ing" by San Joaquin valley growe would only enable growers in oth parts of the State to sell out quic It is a bad situation, which is n at all helped by the work of re estate boomers in selling land high prices, on the promise "fortunes" to be got easily by grov ing fruit.

Food is High Because so Mu is Wasted.

Dr. Pennington, of Agricultural Dep ment, Says if We Could Eat All Raise There Would be No High C of Living. Plans to Stop Spoi and Waste Largely Depend on C Storage.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery W and General Merchant."

Washington, D. C.,
January 22, 1914.

Dr. M. E. Pennington, of t U. S. Department of Agricultu in an address at the Food Qu tion Banquet of the Philadelp Produce Exchange spoke as f lows:—

> No other civilized country waste foodstuffs as we waste them. If al the crops that the farmers rais were utilized; all the meat animal that are killed eaten; all the fish tha come into the nets marketed, hun dreds of thousands who are no hungry would be well fed and th agitation on the subject of high prices would not attract much atten tion. Conservation of foodstuffs, i its broad sense, means not only the saving of the excess production o flush seasons for the seasons o scarcity, but it means also the sys tematic, scientific care that prevents wormy apples, or windfalls, prevents the fermentation of carload after carload of corn, prevents the ran cid butter from the dirty farm, o the rotten eggs, or the tainte chicken.
> The toil of the farmer results i the production of foods. Faul handling, from the time the apple ripe, the egg is laid or the fis caught—for in essentials our fisher men are comparable with out farm ers—reduces enormously the amoun which finally reaches the consuming center, and lowers to even a greater extent the quality of a large propor tion of that which is saved from the crematory or the dump.

These are most vital subjects that "Grocery World and General Merchant" readers are discussing—come in and join them. Perhaps you may win a little money prize, which is surely worth winning. Here are the prizes:—

the wastage of vegetables because of decay, low quality or market gluts. Look at the spoiled poultry during a warm autumn, such as we have just experienced—thousands of pounds of it.

For centuries we have conserved meat by smoking or salting, fish by smoking and drying, winter vegetables by earth cellars. Our great canning industry has so improved and developed the elemental principles of the housewife's "preserving" that it has literally resulted in altering the face of the earth. Man now lives, healthfully, where he could not live heretofore. Canning foodstuffs has also served to equalize the seasonal supply, and is truly conservational. Latest in its development and broadest in its benefits and conserving power, has come refrigeration—again a great industrial development from the housewife's spring house or cellor or ice house.

To refrigeration, more than to any other single factor, must we look for the elimination of decay, the preservation of quality and the conservation of perishable products. Like "smoking," which means the preservation of the meat by the combustion products of wood, or "canning," which means that bacterial life is killed by heat, refrigeration must be specially and accurately applied if its maximum benefits are to be obtained. It must be combined with "good handling," as the broad phrase goes; that is, the perishable article must be put under refrigeration while it is sound and fresh, just as it should be canned while it is sound and fresh. National and State and municipal agencies are now endeavoring to inculcate improved methods of handling foodstuffs at the source of production, and frequently refrigeration is an absolutely necessary part of such methods. The railroads are adding refrigeration cars by the thousand each year, to haul these perishables safely. Refrigerated terminals are being built to receive them, refrigerated warehouses in which to hold them until they are needed.

Only one thing intervenes to prevent refrigeration as a conserver of both quality and quantity of food products from being the greatest price equalizing agency that we at present possess, and that is the ignorance of the consumer of the source and time of the production, transportation and storage of our food supplies. The cupidity of the dishonest tradesman is fed by this ignorance. If the consumer does not wish to eat refrigerated products, he should not be compelled to do so. But he will find that his winter bill of fare will show an overwhelming preponderance of salt pork, corned beef, carrots, turnips and potatoes. If he is to continue to have the cream of all the seasons the year around he must accept them preserved by sterilization or refrigeration—more especially the latter. And to obtain to the full the benefits due him he must have a more intimate, more exact knowledge of whence and how came the food to the markets. He must lend the aid of his knowledge toward the solving of the food question, part of which is the saving of waste and the equalization of supplies.

"Thirty Retail Grocers Sold Out by Sheriff Daily Because They Guess at Costs"

So Says Writer, Who Contends that Average Cost of Retail Grocery Business is 15.91% and Not 17%.

What the cost of conducting the average retail grocery business ought to be, is still an unsettled question. Most people in discussing the question use 17 per cent. as a fair estimate. The "Merchants' Index," of Denver, Col., says the cost in Colorado is 17½ per cent., on the volume of merchandise, while the Los Angeles, Cal., "Commercial Bulletin" says out there it is 14.2 per cent. Now comes "System Magazine," which reduces the general average to 15.91 per cent.

Here are three cases which "System" considers typical, and which it relies upon for its low percentage of 15.91 per cent.:—

GROCERY STORE COSTS.

		Per cent.
Rent		2.07
Salaries		7.96
Advertising		.83
Heat and light		.39
Delivery		2.03
Supplies		.37
Insurance and taxes		.58
General expenses		.45
Depreciation and shrinkage		.76
Bad debts		.47
Total percentage of expenses to sales		15.91

In a Middle Western town of 45,000 this grocery handles annual sales of $50,000 at an expense close to the average. Note (1) that advertising costs less than in other lines; (2) that delivery expenses amount to almost as much as rent.

		Per cent.
Rent	$1,154.85 or	2.3
Salaries	4,067.09 or	8.1
Advertising	351.48 or	.7
Heat and light	251.05 or	.5
Delivery	954.01 or	1.9
Supplies	150.64 or	.3
Insurance and taxes	200.84 or	.4
General expenses	150.63 or	.3
Depreciation and shrinkage	301.27 or	.6
Bad debts	150.63 or	.3
Total expenses	$7,732.48 or	15.40

It is natural that among groceries handling for cash only a trade drawn from modest incomes investigation should fix an expense percentage—14.77 per cent.—below the average.

These figures from a city store represent this type of grocery. Note (1) that there is no delivery expense or loss from bad debts; (2) that a good location is, however, rented.

		Per cent.
Rent	$291.92 or	2.7
Salaries	1,048.76 or	9.7

Insurance and taxes	43.25 or	.4
General expenses	21.62 or	.2
Depreciation and shrinkage	86.50 or	.8
Bad debts
Total expenses	$1,567.73 or	14.5

Investigation also supported the accepted conclusion that, when groceries sell on credit to an exclusive trade, their expenses run above usual levels. These expenses, paid by a city store, typify the average—17.97 per cent.—found for this class of groceries. Note (1) the rent; (2) the wage total; (3) the delivery expense.

		Per cent.
Rent	$2,009.10 or	2.7

General expenses	595.29 or	.8
Depreciation and shrinkage	744.11 or	1.0
Bad debts	595.29 or	.8
Total expense	$14,286.91 or	19.2

Here is the analysis of the expenses of one of the largest and most successful retail grocers in Southern California:—

Cash and credit business.

Approximate yearly volume of business, $250,000.

Regular deliveries made to all points within three miles of the store.

Total cost of doing business, 14 per cent., which is divided as follows:—

	Per cent.
Delivery expense	3.00
Soliciting expense	1.00
Rent	1.00
Salaries	7.00
Taxes and insurance (.01 per cent. included in miscellaneous).
Credit losses	.25
Spoiled merchandise. (Fractional. Included in miscellaneous.)
Depreciation. (Fractional. Included in miscellaneous.)
Water, light, fuel and phones,	.25
Miscellaneous	.50
Total	14.50

Here is a store in Los Angeles city, about a mile and a half from the business center on an important thoroughfare and in a pretty closely built up section of the city:—

Does strictly a cash business.

Approximate volume of business, $35,000 annually.

Deliveries made for a distance of two miles.

Total cost of doing business, 14 per cent., divided as follows:—

	Per cent.
Delivery expense	3.00
Soliciting expense	None

Taxes and insurance	.20

The writer in "System" says that thirty retail grocers are being sold out by the sheriff every day because they are only guessing about their costs.

Fixed Prices Are Only Escape from Unprofitable Retail Grocery Conditions.

So Says Secretary Green, of the National Retail Grocers' Association. Over Half of Average Retail Grocery Business is Done at Cost or Loss.

Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 22, 1914.

The fact that Secretary Redfield, of the Department of Commerce, has given the question of price fixing enough consideration to mention it in an address recently, gives us some assurance that in the near future price fixing or price cutting is going to be discussed very extensively. Therefore we should be prepared to have some influence on the final conclusions reached by the powers that be.

The idea of price fixing is to prevent price cutting or to fix some standard of stability in the distribution of food or other products.

Many of our retailers think that this question only applies to the grocery trade, but while the grocer is very vitally interested yet there are lines more deeply interested than the groocer.

We have come to a place in our existence when we find fifty, yea, nearer sixty per cent. of the grocery trade is done on a basis of no net profit whatever, and it is getting worse because every cut that is made and met makes one more item sold on a losing basis.

The question of price fixing is not new nor is it confined to the United States. This is one of the questions that is agitating the mind of the British grocer fully as much as his American cousin.

We are apt to look on price fixing from only one standpoint. Some even go so far as to say it is curtailing personal liberty. If we would change the phrasing on this subject and call it "prevention of price cutting," we would more readily see the object of our contentions. The fact that government officials are taking up this question gives us hope for the future of retail merchandising.

We are looking forward to a time when it will be impossible

r any one to make the assertion at fifty per cent. of the goods ou handle are done so without t profit.

The agitation for price fixing prevention of price cutting has ome about because of the change the ways of doing business. ulk goods have disappeared. ackage goods have come to stay. he argument of quality used in e one case will not hold good the other. A package of a nown buckwheat is the same erywhere. If you cannot meet e price named by your competor you have no argument. We e confronted by the Supreme ourt decision, the law is against s no matter how righteous our use, we must obey the law.

The law must be changed to eet conditions as they exist and is to accomplish this purpose an an effort has been made to terest all periodicals and newspers in the great question.

Fixed price sentiment is growg, and the next year is going to nd some way by which the price tting method is going to be one away with and a more sane stem of merchandising take its lace.

When this change takes place e retailer should have some say s to what his profit shall be.

JOHN A. GREEN,
Secretary National Retail Grocers' Association.

PEARL BORAX SOAP
Pleases All Classes

It is both the "biggest moneysworth" and the best soap you can sell—it combines quality and economy.

One cake of Pearl Borax Soap will do as much work as two or three cakes of ordinary soap. Every cake is a full pound of hard, white, pure soap that will cleanse thoroughly without injuring the finest fabric. Pearl Borax Soap repeats. Once you start your customers buying it, its quality, combined with our liberal gifts given in exchange for wrappers, will keep them buying and insure you a steady stream of sales.

WITH THE EDITOR

The Oldtime Store Loafer.

An esteemed contemporary, inspired, we believe, by something contained in Kellogg's "Square Dealer," suggests that retailers who are troubled with loafers should tack the following sign on the counter where they sit:—

> A lazy man is of no more use than a dead one — and takes up more room.

The typical loafers of the oldtime country store are gradually disappearing, but there are a few of them left. They would be about as much influenced by this sign as a rhinoceros would be by the tap of a match stick. They wouldn't even feel it. The oldtime store loafer was an interesting type, which existed because his neighborhood had no clubs or general meeting places. The store was his club and his attendance upon it was the soul of regularity. The country stores, and the friendships and discussions which were formed and carried on there, are wrapped up with the beginnings of many great men.

But the times have changed. A few of the older generation still stump down to the store o' nights, and will do so till they die, but the younger generation are not content to, for ‹ her places are being provided for them. From the merchant's standpoint, this is well, for the store loafer never did a store any good, and in many ways was a great nuisance.

"Fifty to Sixty Per Cent. of the Retail Business Done Without a Profit."

In course of an argument for the manufacturer's right to fix retail selling prices on package goods, published elsewhere, National Secretary Green makes a startling statement:—

> We have come to a place in our existence when we find 50, yea, nearer 60 per cent. of the grocery trade is done on a basis of no net profit whatever, and it is getting worse, because every cut that is made and met makes one more item sold on a losing basis.

Is this true? Let us see. If it means that every retail grocer is doing 50 to 60 per cent. of his business without a profit, it is not true. There are plenty of grocers who with occasional and extraordinary exceptions, sell nothing that does not net them a profit.

If it means that there are grocers doing 50 to 60 per cent. of their business without a profit, it is true. There are such grocers without a doubt, but surely they do not constitute any standard by which to judge the trade. No grocer able enough to deserve the name of merchant is to-day making 50 to 60 per cent. of his sales without a profit. No merchant would ever allow himself to be forced to do such a thing, and the National Secretary is therefore a little loose in his statement.

Are Philadelphia Jobbers Unprogressive?

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" has received a letter from an Eastern Pennsylvania subscriber which reads as follows:—

> Why is it that so few Philadelphia jobbers advertise in your valuable paper? Am an up-State retailer and I often wonder why we hear so little of Philadelphia jobbers. Chicago and New York jobbers call on us regularly and are mighty aggressive for our business. But I seldom, if ever, see a representative of a Philadelphia concern.

Outside of a few exceptions it cannot be denied that Philadelphia wholesale grocers are not as progressive or aggressive as they might be, and that this fact, which is so nearly general among them, has lost a vast amount of trade to Philadelphia which would otherwise have come here. This journal itself has recently had an experience which gives point to these remarks. We conceived a plan which is described in the following letter:—

> Gentlemen:—Will you have your credit man send us his photograph and a brief biography of himself?
> We propose to publish a series of illustrated little biographies of the credit men of the jobbing houses of this section, in the belief that the average retailer comes in closer contact with the credit man than with most other members of the concern, and will be interested in seeing and hearing about him.
> There is no string to this anywhere; it is purely our own news feature and involves no charge whatever.
> Respectfully,
> GROCERY WORLD PUBLICATION CO.

This was sent to the twelve largest and supposedly most progressive wholesale grocers in Philadelphia. It received one reply, declining to comply. With this decision, however, we have no quarrel. The other eleven ignored the matter, and in this we submit that they were unprogressive for two reasons:—

1—Because a progressive merchant is invariably courteous, and this was discourteous.

2—Because a progressive merchant gets all the free advertising he can, and this would have been free advertising. The "Grocery World and General Merchant" goes thickly through Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, the very territory that the Philadelphia jobbers cover. Even the mention of their names would have had an advertising value, and a pleasant little biography of their credit man would have had more. Is there any exception to the rule that a man should get everything he can which may benefit him, provided it costs him nothing?

The Profit War.

Before us is an interesting bulletin on the Co-operative Egg Associations in Canada, issued by the United States Department of Commerce. In describing these associations the bulletin says that the constitution of all of them contains the following:—

> The ——— Co-operative Poultry and Egg Marketing Association has for its object the increasing of the profits to poultry raisers by co-operation.
> The association seeks to reach its object (a) by marketing eggs and poultry of only the best quality; (b) by selling eggs and poultry delivered to its members at the highest possible price; (c) by buying for its members grit, feed, shell and such other supplies as are needed in the production of poultry; (d) by buying such pure-bred stock and eggs as may be needed in improving and supplementing the stock already kept by the members; (e) by the dissemination of poultry knowledge.

So the fight goes on—by producers on one side to raise profits, and by consumers on the other side to lower them. Though bloodless, this is really civil war, and it will never stop until some supreme governmental power in some way steps in and assumes control of the situation. It is not easy to see how this could be done, under present governmental methods, but almost anything is better than the present situation. Not only does the latter put producers and consumers out of the harmony in which they should live together, but it breeds all manner of fraudulent selling arguments—as to "real value," and quality. No merchant should be permitted to charge a profit which his customer has reason to attack, and no consumer should be permitted to attack a profit which is reasonable under all the facts of the case.

A Hairbreadth Profit.

Illustrating how tiny a thing is the profit on each unit made by a large manufacturer whose goods sell nationwide, and how small need be the influence that turns the profit into a loss, take a statement made to a "Grocery World and General Merchant" representative by a large flour miller last week. He said that millers now in the business could easily remember when millers made $2 per barrel on flour. To-day they make six cents a barrel. This doesn't seem so insignificant, however, when the fact is added that the capacity of the large mills is 20,000 barrels daily.

The point is the hairbreadth character of the variation which can wipe a mill's flour profit out of existence.

1913 Grocery Failures Largest for Five Years.

1913 General Store Failures Largest for Five Years Excepting 1912. December, 1913, Grocery Failures Increase, But General Store Failures Decrease in Comparison With December, 1912.

Reports from the R. G. Dun agency covering grocery and general store failures for December, 1913, in comparison with December, 1912, have been received, also the comparative report for the last five years. Both are interesting. Last month's report shows a falling off in general store failures and an increase in grocery failures. From the five-year record it appears that more general stores failed in 1913 than in any year of the last five, with the exception of 1912. The number of grocery failures in 1913 was the largest for five years.

The figures follow:—

General Store Failures—December, 1913, 152; liabilities, $1,205,389; December, 1912, 163; liabilities, $1,336,292.

Grocery Failures.—December, 1913, 218; liabilities, $982,226; December, 1912, 196; liabilities, $868,386.

General Store Failures—Whole of 1913, 1,615; total liabilities, $13,183,035; 1912, 1,777; liabilities, $12,760,623; 1911, 1,380; liabilities, $10,977,030; 1910, 1,228; liabilities, $8,719,230; 1909, 1,512; liabilities, $10,517,353.

Grocery Failures—1913, 2,774; liabilities, $15,558,243; 1912, 2,597; liabilities, $13,162,922; 1911, 2,134; liabilities, $9,543,008; 1910, 2,319; liabilities, $8,680,079; 1909, 2,374; liabilities, $9,007,008.

Canned Goods Week.—Anybody entering the Lehman store at Dover, N. J., this week and next will know that it is Canned Goods Week. Counters, floors, top shelves, windows, corners, doorways—all crowded with canned goods. Circulars, newspaper ads., window signs, wagon signs, mailing matter all tell of Canned Goods Week. Three-can price, 6-can price and 12-can price.

In this campaign 10 cans will be moved where only one would move if we "kept still."

Does it pay to "keep" still?

Is this a good suggestion to any of you?

How would it do to take this article up into the office to-morrow morning, let the boss read it over and then tell him that Dover isn't the only place that a successful Canned Goods Week may be conducted, and that you believe that you can move 10 cans instead of one. If you never did anything of that kind before it will be a new and interesting start for you.

Makes no difference what your position is in the store—makes no difference what salary you draw. If nobody makes a move to "do things"—you do them.

Learn To Be Descriptive.—"I'll wait for Mr. A to serve me because he can tell me just what I want to know." That's the whole thing in a nutshell. "Mr. A" learned the art and the value of describing things and he learned it by asking questions and delving into things himself.

Very likely he would be qualified to-day that this package of Quaker Oats is kiln dried—that loose is steam processed. This oil at $1.25 a quart can is the first pressing, that at 85 cents is the second pressing. These sardines at 15 cents are Norway fish. These at 20 cents same size are French—far superior in taste. This brand of caviar is canned in New Jersey. This in Russia. The difference isn't so much in the sturgeon spawn as in the method of preparation.

These peaches at 25 cents are perfect in form and color and free from insect and weather specks. These at 20 cents are irregular in form, packed in a lighter syrup and not entirely free from blight.

This coffee at 38 cents is mellow and delicate with a very rich flavor and brews amber-like. This one at 28 cents is strong, heavy, darker in the cup and not so pleasing in flavor as the higher priced article.

Thus—the descriptive man.

Plan Launched in Pittsburg for Huge Co-operative Buying Organization Among Retailers. Pittsburg Judge Decides Against Claimant of an Icing Receipt in an Interesting Case. Case of Eggs that Carried from Russia Without a Break.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

Pittsburg, Pa.,
January 23, 1914.

A project to eliminate the jobber in the grocery business and to bring about a reduction of from 10 to 20 per cent. in prices to consumers was started here January 15th when grocers from Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio and West Virginia met at the Fort Pitt Hotel and organized a co-operative body that will buy direct from the producer. More than 200 grocers in the district attended the gathering and were enrolled as members. There were nineteen counties in Western Pennsylvania represented. The association will engage buyers to contract for commodities from all parts of the world. Shipping headquarters will be at the Pittsburg Terminal Warehouses, where already nearly half a million dollars worth of foodstuffs have been contracted for. The association is capitalized at $1,000,000 and will have a buying capacity of more than $10,000,000 a year. The following officers and directors were elected: President, C. E. Foringer; vice-president, G. B. Fuscus; secretary, L. P. Rearick; treasurer, C. F. Stevenson; directors, Frank L. Groff, Berlin, Pa.; J. F. Lynch, Brownsville, Pa.; Ira Powell, Rochester, Pa.; B. W. Hawes, Cherry Tree, Pa.; Charles Fleckenstein, Point Marion, Pa.; W. J. Stilley, Bruceton, Pa.; G. B. Fisch, Leechburg, Pa.; W. J. Kennedy, Mars, Pa.; L. A. Leathers, Brookville, Pa.; G. R. Ross, Bellevue, Pa. Arrangements were made to put the project into operation February 1st. A statement from the board follows: "It is practically the largest scheme of the kind for the reduction of prices ever undertaken in this community. The association is the only one of its kind in the country. There is little doubt that it will become general in its workings in the near future. The association is simply a co-operative body operating on an immense scale among the merchants and must be regarded as the greatest jobbing concern of its kind in the world. Merchants will place orders months in advance and take advantage in price that is incidental to buying in great quantities."

In connection with the above combination, there will be erected here a factory that will produce 1,687 grocery store commodities and sell them at a price about 30 per cent. below the present list price. In talking of the grocers' organization, C. C. Truax, president of the Pittsburg Grocery Co., said: "Throughout the United States there soon will be fifteen such organizations comprising about 2,000 retail grocers. All will be affiliated with the United Grocers' Co., of Toledo, Ohio. The Pittsburg organization plans to eliminate the expense of wholesale grocers' credits, commercial salesmen, advertising and brokers' commissions. Each grocer is a stockholder. There is an impression prevailing that by buying from the United Grocers' Co. we will not abolish the middleman's profit. But brokerage charged by it will be more than offset by the tremendous buying power of our company.

Judge John D. Shafer, in Common Pleas Court, January 15th, decided that a baker has no legal right to the exclusive use of a receipt in the making of confections, even although it is generally believed that he originated it. The decision was the result of a suit brought by Frank Wenzel against C. M. Ellenberger. Both are proprietors of bakeries. Wenzel enjoyed a fine trade in cakes, principally because of the delicious qualities of the icings with which he covered them. Several weeks ago one of Wenzel's bakers quit and went to work for Ellenberger. He took with him the secret of the delectable frosting and imparted it to the rival baker. Ellenberger's trade at once expanded while Wenzel complains his fell off considerably because of the competition. He sought to have Ellenberger enjoined from using the receipt for the palate-pleasing icing, but Judge Shafer ruled he had no recourse in law. The advertising the two got out of the suit compelled them to put extra bakers to work to supply the demand in the community for their cakes.

Members of the Pittsburg Butter and Egg Exchange were present at a conference in the Wabash Railroad Building, January 17th, when a case of eggs shipped from Russia was opened. It contained 120 dozen Russian eggs and not one was broken. This fact was set up to prove that the many breakage claims made by American shippers are the result of poor packing. The Russian case was lined with excelsior, a layer of which separated each layer of eggs. This case, which was one of a shipment of fifty, the rest of which were sold, was forwarded to Los Angeles and is to be returned here, after inspection at Los Angeles, as a further test of the Russian system of packing.

Pennsylvania Organization Notes.

There was a large gathering of the merchants of Punxsutawney on the evening of January 15th. The merchants assembled at the rooms of the association at 7.30 and after the transaction of routine business proceeded in a body to the social hall of the First Presbyterian Church, where a banquet was served. The menu was an elaborate one, well served and much appreciated.

After the dinner Mr. H. J. Hoch, acting as toastmaster, introduced William Smedley, of Philadelphia, who delivered an interesting talk on "Organization." Other speakers were G. W. Fink, Chief Burgess; I. H. Fink, J. B. Eberhart, all merchants, and Samuel M. Rosenthal, editor of the Punxsutawney "Spirit."

The New York Department Store Failure. New York Jobbers' Convention. American Sugar Refining Company Gives Figures to Show it is Not a Trust. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

New York, January 22, 1914.

Grocers have a natural interest in recent developments affecting big department stores in view of the alarm that was created only a few years ago as to the effect of the operations of such stores upon the small retailers.

One of the big chains of department stores in New York with a private bank as a feature of the business has just failed. A department store in Brooklyn, one of the oldest, failed not long ago and was reorganized.

Then there is much talk that this class of stores generally are not doing the amount of business that they formerly did, or at least that they are not prospering as they did in the earlier part of their careers. While some of these stores are certainly on a strong financial basis even now and are making money, yet there has been talk about one or two that are said to have as much as they can do to keep their heads above water.

The present results are taken to mean that the small retailers have met the competition of the department stores, as they have that of the chain stores, and have not come out second best in the struggle.

One explanation of the troubles of some of the department stores is that the public has been gradually educated to an understanding of the real nature of the bargain ads. that used to draw thousands to stores where there were no real bargains. There were various tricks familiar to some of these stores which succeeded for a time, but which are now familiar also to the public and so no longer succeed.

Retail grocers through their organizations and otherwise have proved a factor in this exposure of tricky methods on the part of some of these stores.

Another factor that has worked to the disadvantage of the department stores has been the difficulty of getting department heads who would take the same active and intelligent interest in the growth of the business that is given by men in business for themselves. As the department stores grew in size they have grown more and more away from the personal attention of their founders. Machine methods have succeeded whatever individuality there was in the beginning in some of these stores.

The small storekeeper dealing directly with his customers has always a certain advantage, as the public likes to deal with the responsible head of a business. The bargain of the big store was the counter attraction and when it lost its force many began to drift away and return to the small stores for most of their supplies at least.

Still another heavy loss to department stores has come through the public or a part of the public imposing upon them. These stores have gone the limit in trying to keep customers satisfied by allowing the return of almost any kind of merchandise and giving back either cash or credit slips. People have often bought things for temporary wear or use and then returned them, claiming that they did not suit. It is said that this practice has grown to enormous proportions and that wealthy customers have been the worst offenders.

While department stores of the better kind will continue and prosper, when conducted along business lines, yet grocers as well as other small storekeepers no longer fear them. The tide seems to have turned in favor of the smaller stores.

The problem of getting the products of the farm to the consumer with less expense than at present is to have the attention of Governor Glynn who is to suggest legislation on the subject. He made this announcement in an address delivered Wednesday at the meeting of the New York State Agricultural Society at Albany.

The Governor is making a reputation as a business-like executive and so it is considered likely that some definite action will follow the present announcement. He said that he had already studied the subject sufficiently to learn that for every dollar paid by the consumer for food from the farm only 35 cents goes to the farmer or producer. The remainder is divided among transportation companies and the various distributing agencies, from the commission dealer to the retailer.

The proportion of 65 cents on the dollar paid for distribution in a State like New York, with all of its resources and facilities, is not creditable to the State, the Governor said.

A remedy which, the Governor said, strikes him favorably, is to encourage the formation of co-operative selling associations in farming communities. The retail grocers could readily buy their supplies direct from such association, in the Governor's opinion, and this would be at least one step in reducing expenses of distribution.

Another measure which the Governor will advocate, he said, is to provide means by which people of industry and thrift who lack only capital shall be enabled to take up and cultivate farm lands that are now unproductive. He said that the State should loan money for this purpose.

Increasing the number of farmers and the extent of land cultivated in this State, he said, would prove of far-reaching effect in increasing food supplies and lessening the cost of living.

At a hearing in this city in the Government's suit for the dissolution of the American Sugar Co. a lengthy statement with a mass of statistics was submitted Wednesday by E. F. Atkins, the chairman of the company's Board of Directors.

In this statement the company denies that it is in any sense a trust or that it has any monopoly of the domestic sugar market. These assertions are made solely as to the company under its present management.

The company further claims that competition in the sugar market is always keen and that prices fluctuate constantly according to the condition of the raw sugar market and the laws of supply and demand. The company claims that the price of sugar has been cut down very greatly since it was organized.

A comparison of the average prices of 96 test raw centrifugal and refined granulated sugar for a number of years back with the margins between the prices of raw and refined sugar will be of interest to grocers who are often asked questions about the prices of food products now and in former years:—

The salt fish interests in this city are preparing to send representatives to Washington February 5th, when a hearing will be given on the McKellar bill regulating the cold storage business. A number of houses have already forwarded protests against the bill, especially against the limits it puts to the time in which food may be kept in cold storage before being shipped in interstate commerce.

It is said that Mr. McKellar, of the House of Representatives, has expressed his willingness to modify the time limits, but these modifications do not go far enough in the opinion of wholesale fish dealers and shippers. They declare that the bill in anything like its present form will prove a great injustice to the fish industries and will greatly increase prices of various kinds of fish without any benefit to the consumers. The danger of fish being placed on the market in an unfit condition has been greatly exaggerated, the fish dealers say.

W. N. White & Co. have written a statement contradicting conclusions sent out from Washington as to the sufficiency of the potato crop now on hand. The Washington authorities said that the quantity now on hand is normal for this time of the year.

In their statement the dealers say that the consumption from January 1st until new crops are available is at least one-half of the year's total consumption. The firm says that during the remainder of the winter months after January 1st people eat more potatoes than in the earlier months of the year because other kinds of vegetables are now scarcer and higher priced. The firm also says that the Washington authorities seem to have overlooked the fact that a large part of the potatoes now on hand must be used as seed potatoes for the next crop. The total supplies January 1st, according to the Washington re-

Sugar is probably the most sensitive article sold in a grocery store and should be protected from dust and dirt. Scientists tell us that it breeds germs with dangerous rapidity, when once exposed. Women may not examine sugar to see if it has germs in it and they may be content to use sugar which needs no examination to show that it is dusty; BUT, as soon as they see FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR they KNOW it is better, purer, finer, cleaner sugar than they have ever had before. If you are the proprietor of a pure food store you can tell your customers about FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in a way that will increase their respect for your desire to serve them with the purest and cleanest foods which can be obtained. Summarized Market Conditions.

In the spot coffee market tr is quiet and is of a routine ch cter. Prices are steady. Rio 7s re quoted at 9½ cents and Santos 4s at 12 to 12⅛ cents. The easier conditions in the Brazil markets has an effect on local sentiment in that buyers are the more inclined to continue their policy of buying from hand to mouth. The mild grades are barely steady and the demand is slow. The business is mostly of a jobbing character with little doing in forward shipment.

Teas are moving in a routine way only, with prices firm on both black and green teas. The warehouse supplies being within small compass, according to statistics, the holders are not pressing sales and expect better prices when the country begins to replenish supplies.

Rice is in fair demand, both as to domestic and foreign kinds. Prices are steady. It is expected that many distributors will begin to buy more freely next month after they have taken stock. Reports from the South say that mill offerings are more liberal, but much of the rice is of poor quality.

There is only a light demand for refined sugar. The advance in raws has not stimulated the buying sentiment to any noticeable extent. All interests quote 5 cents for standard granulated in barrels and bags with other grades five points more.

Distributors are going slowly in buying molasses. The receipts in this market have declined and reports indicate that the primary markets have largely cleaned up and are now quiet.

Spot canned tomatoes are firm and quiet, sales being practically confined to occasional car lots. In No. 3s most sales are at 70 cents Baltimore, f. o. b., but there are some sales at 67½ cents with the 14-cent freight rate. Offerings of No. 2s are light, as supplies of this grade have been somewhat cleaned up by consumption. It is said that nothing of this grade is now to be had for less than 50 cents Baltimore, f. o. b. There is not much demand for spot corn, but prices are firm, especially on desirable fancy and standard stock. Although there is not much demand at present for fancy peas, yet prices are firm, as supplies are said to be in small compass. The supplies of

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Grocery World and General Merchant" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

III.—The Cost of the Roaster the Small or Moderate-sized Retailer Should Use to do His Own Roasting.

By William B. Harris.

The next question to be considered in connection with a roasting outfit is the initial cost of the various machines on the market. Very naturally the first question asked would be what make of machine can be purchased for the least money?

The A. J. Deer Co., anticipating that first cost would be an important factor, have built a very attractive machine of ten-pound capacity which can be purchased for $150. This includes freight East of the Rocky Mountains. This machine is rather small, but it permits building up a business so that a larger size can follow later out of the profits of the business where a dealer does not feel like investing a larger amount until he has tried out the possibilities of the plan.

The next size to be considered is the machine of fifteen-pound capacity. The Burns machine No. 9 is offered at $215 plus freight to destination, while the Deer machine No. 4 is catalogued at $225 with freight allowance.

There is only one make of machine of twenty-five-pound capacity, and it is a Deer machine priced at $300. This is the most practical size for the retail dealer. It is large enough to take care of the average trade requirements and small enough to handle an order of a few pounds that might be roasted separately for a special customer.

For $400 plus freight to destination the grocer can secure the forty-pound cylinder of the Huntly Manufacturing Co.

There are two machines made of the half bag or sixty-five-pound capacity. One, the Burns machine at $475, the other the Lambert make at $425 less a discount of 10 per cent. on the latter.

At $500 the Deer Co. offer a machine roasting up to seventy-five pounds and for $550 there is the Huntly machine which will turn out eighty pounds at a charge. The former is f. o. b. destination while the latter is listed f. o. b. factory.

This leaves the bag size to be considered and here we have three makes of machines to select from:—

The Burns machine at $700 f. o. b. New York.

The Deer machine at $750 f. o. b. destination.

The Lambert machine at $675 f. o. b. factory with a cash discount of 10 per cent.

There is never very much difficulty in setting up the small machines and in getting them running. With the larger sizes, particularly the bag roaster, there are a number of points requiring careful consideration: The space must be sufficient for operation. The exhaust for carrying off the smoke and chaff must be large enough for the purpose. Electric power must be sufficient for operating various parts of the machine and the supply of gas must be steady and large enough to produce the required amount of heat. It is better therefore to have plans carefully made for bag or even half bag machines and get full particulars and figures where such sizes are to be installed.

Florida beans of good quality range from $3 to $3.50, and are in fair demand.

No Quantity Discounts on Welch's

The 1913 grape crop is memorable for exceptional quality of fruit, short yield, and "highest ever" prices.

Some months ago we started to plan a one-price proposition. We put the plan into effect on December 1st, and notwithstanding the unusual grape situation, a lower list now prevails excepting in the far West.

13—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because so large a proportion of manufacturers of advertised goods authorize you to give the money back to a dissatisfied customer.

¶ The merchant who feels he can advertise: "Your money back if anything we sell is unsatisfactory," opens a way to his customer's heart and confidence that will always be wholly or partly closed to the merchant who cannot say that as to anything or everything.

¶ Retailers are freer with this offer when manufacturers stand behind them. Think how many manufacturers of nationally advertised goods stand behind you, and how few manufacturers of non-advertised goods do. Why? Because the manufacturer of a nationally advertised brand has created a reputation for himself which he must protect.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

There has been no change in the tea market during the week. The demand is fair at ruling prices. There have been no change in prices, either in old or new teas.

Coffee.

No material changes can be reported in Rio or Santos coffee for the week. Options have rather sharply declined, but in spite of this holders of actual coffee are asking a shade more for their stocks. The demand is quiet. Mild coffees seem to be wanted at steadily maintained prices. No change is reported for the week. Java and Mocha are steady on an unchanged basis; demand fair.

Sugar.

Sugar is strong and advancing, meaning refined sugar. Raws have advanced a fair fraction by reason of scarcity, which, however, is probably only temporary. The present margin between raw and refined is too small to let refiners out satisfactorily, and refined therefore advanced 5 to 15 points, according to the refiner, on Thursday. The demand for refined sugar is dull.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. The demand for compound syrup is seasonably fair, without, however, any change in price. Sugar syrup is unchanged and dull. Molasses shows no change and fair demand.

Fish.

Mackerel of all grades is just about where it was a week ago. The demand is fair, and the market steady to firm. Cod, hake and haddock about unchanged, steady to firm, fair demand. Salmon of all grades precisely where it was a week ago; demand moderate. Sardines, both imported and domestic, still very scarce and high because of that fact.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are firmer by about 2½ cents, and not all packers will now sell at 67½ cents in a large way f. o. b. Many are holding out for 70, which would mean an advance within two weeks of 5 cents, but few if any sales have been made at that figure up to now. Any sharp advance in tomatoes seems very unlikely. Corn and peas are unchanged on spot and in fair seasonable demand. Some fancy future peas are selling because of the scarcity of spot stock; standard futures neglected. Future corn is wanted to some extent. Apples are unchanged and in moderate demand. California canned goods are where they were a week ago, both as to price and movement. Small Eastern canned goods quiet and unchanged, most lines firm.

Dried Fruits.

There are no changes to report in dried fruits. Prunes, peaches and apricots are precisely where they were a week ago; demand fair. Raisins are still dull and unchanged in price, except that the combine has dropped the price of 1912 raisins, of which it is reported to have some 5,000 tons left. Currants, citron, dates and figs are all seasonably active and unchanged in price.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans unchanged and fairly active. Marrows are also unchanged. They would have been higher if the quality of the current supplies had shown up well. California limas are unchanged and quiet. Green and Scotch peas, especially Scotch, are very weak and depressed, and all sorts of offers are being made by holders.

Butter.

The receipts of fresh butter have increased considerably, and as the consumptive demand is only fair the market has declined 2 cents on all grades of fresh stock. Storage butter is also in light demand at a decline of about 1 cent. The recent decline is expected to stimulate the demand and if so, prices may show no further decline.

Eggs.

The demand for fresh eggs is very good, and the market is firm at an advance of 1 cent. The demand is being chiefly supplied by fresh eggs, owing to the extreme light stocks of storage eggs. Foreign eggs are still so high, owing to the demand from this country, that American importers cannot profitably bring them in. Very few storage eggs are left, and the future of the market depends on the weather from now on.

Cheese.

The demand for early cheese is very good and the market is firm at ¼ cent advance. Stocks are a little lighter than usual, and the consumptive demand is fully up to expectations for the season. Under grades are also in good demand and the market is firm.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are firm at ¼ cent advance, due to the increased consumptive demand. Pure and compound lard are firm at ¼ cent advance. Barreled pork and canned meats are steady and unchanged, with only a fair demand. Dried beef is still several cents above normal, though much lower than the highest point.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Rice.

There is considerable improvement in the general conditions; business sentiment has changed from despondency to a spirit of cheerfulness, and the disposition is to look ahead for brighter things. It is clear on the part of those whose opinion counts for anything that no real business boom is evident, but the general trend seems to be that there will be a steady improvement from this time forward. This improvement is sustained largely by the fact that stocks have run down to a low ebb and the necessity has arisen to replenish, which naturally gives a degree of strength to the market. The trade must have goods to meet their regular requirements. Business cannot stand still, and as supplies are undoubtedly below the average, the movement must therefore affect the general situation favorably and this will surely create a steady improvement in the demand. The call seems to be for all grades of both Honduras and Japan at decidedly stronger prices, with markedly evident tendency to still higher values. Foreign is apparently neglected, or at all events moving out very slowly.

Advices from the South, along the Atlantic Coast, report steady renewal in the demand at firm prices. At New Orleans the market shows more activity and dealers are responding to the improvement in the general situation. The mills are putting out their product without difficulty, so that there is no special accumulation of stocks, and this helps to sustain the market.

In the interior—Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas—reports are to the effect that the planters still control the situation and are forcing the mills to accept the conditions in the rough market and pay the prices demanded.

Cables and correspondence from abroad note good inquiry for rough rice at firm prices; "spot cleaned," more doing; "forward Burma," firmer; Siam in better demand; Saigon neglected.

D. Talmage's Sons Co.
New York and New Orleans.

Standard Canned Goods.

Continued activity in the tomato market was the feature here, and at the close the outlook is considered to be excellent for further activity. It is a perfectly natural reaction from the extremely low prices that prevailed during the last three months, and it was long overdue. It is not at all likely to be a run-away market, just a healthy, natural return to normal conditions and prices, and intending buyers may have confidence in the stability of the market from now on.

The buying was larger than it was, and the orders for tomatoes came from all sections of the country that look to this market for supplies. In the last two weeks the steady buying of No. 2 tomatoes has caused an advance of 5 cents per dozen in that size, and during last week No. 3 standards advanced 2½ cents per dozen, with strong indications of a further advance coming in the near future. It is not unreasonable to expect a staple article of merchandise, like tomatoes, for instance, to advance to the cost of manufacture, plus the cost of carrying the goods, when the market conditions return to normal.

In the other lines of canned vegetables sweet potatoes were again active and stronger at a shade higher prices, and they look still stronger ahead. They were widely scattered last week. String beans and wax beans, kraut, baked beans and spinach were the next active articles, though not in a large way, and

WHY?

¶ Seriously, we cannot see why anybody would willingly buy seeded raisins when they can get Not-a-Seed Raisins. They want raisins without seeds in—why should they take raisins that have been mangled by a seeder when they can get raisins that never had seeds in ?

¶ Turn out a carton of seeded beside a carton of Not-a-Seeds and see the difference yourself. That same difference will impress every one of your customers and will sell Not-a-Seeds with far more satisfaction than seeded raisins could ever give. BURK'S
Breakfast Relish

This product is usually called "Minced Ham" by the consumer. It consists of choice, tender pieces of pork, chopped to the proper degree of fineness and stuffed in a linen container. It is smoked just long enough to acquire that pleasant and appetizing flavor which only hickory wood can impart. Weight about five pounds each.

After the bag is removed in the same manner as from our Lunch Roll, the Relish is cut in thin slices, and the only additional preparation necessary for serving is to fry it a few minutes over a hot fire.

This makes it one of the quickest, most economical and at the same time one of the most satisfying and nutritious breakfasts obtainable.

If you are not already using Burk's Breakfast Relish—give it a trial. Like all other "Burk" products—it is the best on the market.

BURK'S
Piǵ Souse

IS A SEASONABLE SPECIALTY

Prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock.

Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pigs' feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Give it a trial and be convinced.

That Mouse Trap Story

¶ Wasn't it Emerson who said that if a man only built a better mouse trap than his neighbor, he could build his shop in the heart of the woods, and the people would still find him ?

¶ We have done something like that, although we haven't gone into the woods. We have devised a coffee package that is different and better than any other on the market—a one-pound burlap bag exactly like the large burlap bags that coffee is wholesaled in. In this we pack Private Estate Coffee, and the people are surely finding the retail stores that handle it. It is a most attractive and appealing package.

¶ Private Estate Coffee is a blend containing fine Mexican. It is satisfying an enormous mass of people who weren't quite satisfied with other coffees.

each of them is worth attention. The cold weather appears to have increased the orders for them. Corn and peas were inactive again last week, but they will have their innings later on doubtless.

Nothing of special interest occurred last week in any line of canned fruits, excepting that some fresh pineapples from Cuba were canned here, an unusual occurrence for this time in the year. Spot pears are nearly sold out, only a few cases of the cheaper kind remaining here, along with a few cases of the better grades. Apples are in fair demand, but the other lines of fruits were dull, excepting pie peaches and seconds peaches, for which there was a small demand.

Zero weather last week caused higher prices for raw oysters and a stronger market for the canned article. A continuation of the freezing weather would cause higher prices for cove oysters immediately.

Spices.

The market continues exceedingly active. Foreign markets are also quite active, due to brisk trading in futures.

Pepper.—Prices in Europe and the East are higher. Our market has also advanced. Stocks continue unusually small and the tendency upward.

Cloves very scarce here and in very fair demand. Europe is very much higher than our market.

Pimento (Allspice) in only fair demand at steady but unchanged prices.

Nutmegs steady at the old advance. Very much higher prices are likely this spring.

Cassias.—Futures are fairly active. Spot goods are held at steady but unchanged prices.

Gingers practically without interest. Present prices unusually low.

Tapiocas firmer for all varieties. There is a fair demand at present.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—Poppy, caraway and mustard seeds in fair demand at steady prices. Canary slightly lower. Caraway is higher; in fact, spot prices are less than present import cost. Better grades of poppy seed reported scarce.

Sage and sweet herbs in good demand.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Business has opened up very much better than we expected.

Herring during the last week have been selling very freely, and prices have been maintained quite well. Holland herring particularly were in quite good demand; so were Scotch herring. Norway herring are continuing to sell in a hand to mouth way, but orders are coming in a satisfactory way.

Imported Oil Sardines.—There is hardly any change in the situation. The report from Norway continues very discouraging. There has been no catch, and there cannot be very much more caught during the time in which the packing will take place. We shall have to wait for the beginning of the summer catch before we look for any large supplies of Norway smoked sardines. In the meanwhile the trade has taken to Portuguese sardines in place of the Norwegian, and also some sprats. Sprats have been selling very much better of late. It is on account of the scarcity of Norway sardines. In France the catch of sprats is very poor so far. In Belgium it is only quite satisfactory. Prices for sprats are about the same as they were last season, only of course, owing to the lesser duty, the price to the trade is lower, and this has stimulated the sale.

MARKET NOTES.

Florida oranges are coming forward more freely, and the price has dropped somewhat. The general range of the market is now $2 to $2.50 per box. The quality of the current receipts is good.

Florida tomatoes rule at a moderate price—$2 to $3 per crate. The quality is fair and the demand moderate.

California cauliflower is cheap—$1.25 for the small and $2.50 for the large. The receipts are rather too large for the demand.

Florida squash range from $2 to $2.25 per crate, which is comparatively high. The demand is fair.

Florida salad has advanced also and now ranges from $2.25 to $2.75. Scarcity is the reason. The quality is good and the demand active.

New Bermuda potatoes are about where they have been—$5 to $7 per barrel; selling well in a limited way.

Florida eggplants range from $2.50 to $3.50 per crate and are moderately wanted.

Receipts of eggs are in excess of requirements and prices have declined. Receivers are making concessions in an effort to find a wider outlet for supplies and there are some indications that out of town and speculative interests may take hold. Many Philadelphia produce merchants and cold storage men are protesting against the enactment of the McKellar cold storage bill now pending in Congress, which proposes to limit the time of storage of perishable commodities from two to six months. They claim that the enactment of this legislation will discourage production, destroy the collateral value of perishable products and be detrimental to the consumer in the end, because cold storage warehouses are necessary, do not regulate prices and are used to store goods in times of overproduction to meet the necessity of the time of a short supply. Representative J. Hampton Moore, in whose district most of these houses are located, has received many letters and petitions urging that the bill be defeated. Among those protestants are: Thomas Callahan & Sons, W. R. Brice & Co., H. S. Pennypacker, John J. MacDonald, Edson Brothers, Pennsylvania Cold Storage and Market Co., A. J. M. Murdock & Co., John W. Miller's Sons, P. E. Sharpless Co., J. M. Morris Co. and Crawford & Lehman. It is proposed to have hearings on the bill before a sub-committee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce about February 5th and notices will be sent to all parties interested.

UnanswerableArgumentAgainst Cold Storage Limitations is Food Stored Longer and Still Good.

Philadelphia Produce Exchange Asks Chief Government Chemist to Dinner at Which Mostly Cold Storage Food is Served. Perfectly Good Shad Stored Nine Months, While Congress is Being Asked to Limit to Two Months.

The Philadelphia Produce Exchange at a dinner held in Philadelphia last Tuesday evening furnished in tangible form an unanswerable argument against certain laws in Pennsylvania and other States, especially a pending Federal law, which prescribe certain periods beyond which food products shall not be kept in storage. Behind this restriction is of course the belief that products held after the prescribed periods are not fit for food. The Produce Exchange, at its dinner served to its own members and its guests, one of whom was Dr. Carl Alsberg, Chief United States Government chemist, food that had nearly all been kept in storage for longer periods than any present law allows, and far longer than the bill now pending in Congress would allow. The foods served, with their history, were as follows:—

Soup made from guinea killed September 23, 1913, and since stored.

Celery grown in Ro hester son of 1913.

Olives pickled in Seville, Sp September and October, 1913

Almonds grown in Spain son of 1913.

Shad caught in Delaware R May 2, 1913.

Chicken killed September 1913.

Currant jelly made from rants pickled in July, 1913.

Roquefort cheese made in Ju 1913.

Apples picked in Oregon son of 1913.

Ice cream made from str berries picked in Maryland May, 1913.

Cake baked from eggs laid April, 1913.

Pineapple juice pressed in Ju 1913.

Butter made August 19, 191

Some of these foods had exceeded the legal periods, w others had. Eggs, for insta and fish. Under the bill pend in Congress fish cannot shipped from State to State i has been stored more than months. Yet here is fish ser to the Chief Government Ch ist which has been in storage almost nine months, and was apparently as good as e Which means that it could h been kept even longer.

After such practical illus tions of the fact that cold stor food retains its edibility l after the period allowed by l what possible excuse can s laws have?

ne Advertising of the Hamilton Corporation.

Portland, Ore., Jan. 19, 1914.
the Editor.

Dear Sir:—It's none of my iness, of course, but I am ious to know how you and r paper can keep good faith h the retail grocer and at the e time accept advertising n the Hamilton Coupon Cor- ation, or did you know that corporation and the Sperry Hutchinson Co. were inti- ely allied and in fact are ed by the same capital?

Very truly yours,
L. R. MERRICK,
ecretary Oregon Retail Mer- chants' Association.

The "Grocery World and Gen- Merchant" sees not the htest reason why it should de- cline the advertising of the Ham- ilton Corporation. The concern is a perfectly high grade and le- gitimate one, and has been in successful business for many years. Some of its stock may or may not be held by the Sperry & Hutchinson Co., but what of it? Is a person disbelieving in S. & H. trading stamps to refuse to buy bread from a bakery in which some member of the S. & H. Co. happens to have stock?

The premium idea is very much unsettled. It lies in nobody's mouth to urge it to be settled fact that premiums are a bad thing or a good thing. Opinions differ. Some retail merchants believe in them, defend them and use them. Others denounce them and will have nothing to do with anything or anybody that uses them. Both classes have a right to their opin- ion. The "Grocery World and General Merchant" believes it would be as quick as any paper to refuse the advertising of a con- cern which was without question fraudulent or wrong, such as a collection agency or a piano scheme that had been exposed as a fake, but why it should refuse to do business with the Hamilton Corporation it cannot see.

Hard Luck on a Far California Ranch.

Moorpark, Cal., Jan. 12, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We read all copies of "Grocery World and General Merchant" that come to this ranch, and that is every week, and get news that no other paper tells us. We planted a crop of 100 acres of garden seed beans in 1913, and harvested 400 bags, should have been 1,000 to 1,500. Should we have planted the Black Eyes beans, the crop we have grown for some time, we could have had the 1,000 to 1,500 and would have been $2,500 to $3,000 in pocket in place of $1,100.

Yours truly,

Keep Pace with the Advertising of the Goods You Sell

MERCHANDISING success, in any line, depends upon right goods and a thorough selling knowledge of those goods.

The first essential, right goods, is easy enough to establish in your store; every branch of manufacture is represented by one or more trade marked, advertised products of Class A quality, and the manufacturers will meet you more than half way.

The second essential, selling knowledge of the goods, is as easily attained—simply read up, study, keep pace with all advertising of products sold in your store.

National Biscuit Company products are right. N. B. C. advertising is world-famous. The In-er-seal Trade Mark packages and the glass front cans are familiar everywhere.

N. B. C. products will keep you facing successward—N. B. C. advertising will sell goods for you if you will give it a chance.

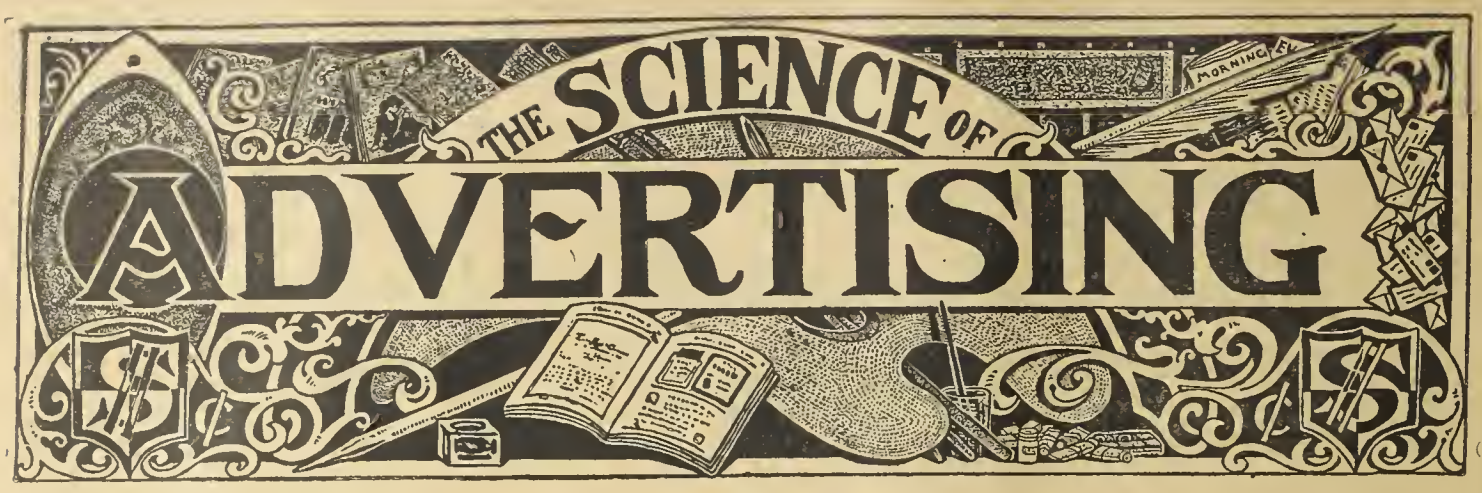
Lovett M. Wood, of Seattle, Wash., Dead.

Lovett M. Wood, of Seattle, died in Shanghai, China, on Friday, January 9th. The cause of his death is not known as yet, but it is suspected to have been due to stomach troubles, from which he was a sufferer. Scottish Rite Masonic bodies in Shanghai conducted brief funeral services there and the body was cremated for shipment back to his home. Mr. Wood was well known throughout the American trade, having been for many years editor and publisher of the Seattle "Trade Register" and prominent in trade press and grocery association circles. He was a native of Canada, but had spent most of his life in this country. In Boston he learned the trade of printer and many years ago went West, settled at Seattle, started a large printing business and incidentally edited the "Trade Register," which became an influential publication on the Pacific Coast. About four years ago Mr. Wood was appointed United States Commercial Agent in the Orient, in the employ of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and traveled extensively throughout Japan, China and the Philippines investigating possible markets for American enterprise and the reporting on conditions as he found them in those lands. Many a report of his proved of great value to business men, and after leaving the Government service he returned to China in the interests of private enterprises with notable success.

Florida grapefruit are high and scarce—$4 to $5 for anything good.



Mr. T. C. Miller, of Red Lion, Pa., sends me a copy of a little —I judge co-operative—local paper called the "Red Lion News," containing his half page advertisement and the advertisements of other local merchants. The little paper measures 8½ x 11 inches and has eight pages. Most of it is advertising, but there is enough local news in it to cause it to be looked for by the people.

The "Red Lion News" is evidently not a new idea, for the number before me is Vol. 5, No. 74. It seems to be published every two weeks. The paper is considerably better in one respect than the average co-operative paper, and for that reason I want to reproduce the first page, which contains reading matter only.

Below is all the reading matter in it with the exception of a half page on page 4. The balance is all advertising of Red Lion merchants, well set and presenting a good clean appearance. Here is a printer, evidently, who takes pride in his work and does the best he can to produce a job that will reflect credit both on himself and on his customers. It is refreshing to find such a one, for most of them are careless woodenheads. I suppose this paper is produced like other co-operative papers—the advertisers each pay a proportionate share in the cost, and each gets a certain number of copies. Each one distributes his copies containing his own advertisement, and of course distributes his fellow-advertisers' advertisement also, and so it goes. Or this may be run as a regular paper, the printer getting it up and charging regular advertising rates, doing the distributing himself. I see a note on page 4 that the paper is distributed free. I believe in these little co-operative advertising papers for small towns—often they represent the very best and cheapest plan by which the retailers of such places can advertise. The "Red Lion News" is better than the average of these papers because it doesn't print any of these interminable recipes and "Hints for Housewives" that so many of them feel it necessary to print. Every line of the reading matter in it is local news of the sort that the people of a little country town will eat up, as it were. I have never understood why the co-operative paper almost always considers it necessary to compete with the magazines and the big dailies in its reading matter, where it has open for it the whole field of local news where nobody can compete. The little "Red Lion News" evidently sees the force of this; it is the sort of paper I can imagine filed in their order and taken u in strict rotation.

The New Year

EVERY YEAR is a fresh beginning
Every morn is the world made new
You are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you.
All the past things are past and over,
The tasks are done and the tears are shed;
Yesterday's errors let yesterday cover;
Letting the dead past bury its dead.
The darkness of night with the night hath fled.
Yesterday now is a part of forever.

To one and all we extend the customary greeting, and with it the hope that our little paper may contribute not a little towards the accomplishment of this end—"A Happy New Year."

A good rule for this year is—"No sorrow, no burden this year shall be of my own making. If I am unhappy it shall not be through any fault of my own."

Kindness is the music of good-will to men; and on this harp the smallest fingers may play heaven's sweetest tunes on earth.

Be of good cheer, and let the year 1914 be one of gladness and of growth. Let the merry laugh ring out—lift up the drooping heads and be strong, be brave, be glad.

The Delivery Question!

WEIGH IT CAREFULLY

Weigh the delivery question carefully. It is a large expense item in your business. Take the cost per week of keeping two horses and paying two drivers, divide it by the number of orders delivered and you'll be surprised at the cost per order. You'll see what has been taking too large a share of your profits.

One International Motor Truck will do as much work as two horses and wagons; by using it you materially reduce your delivery cost. No matter what it has been costing you per order to deliver goods, you'll be able to do it for much less money with an International Motor Truck. CCXLIII.—An Interesting Case Between Two Philadelphia Merchants Which Points a Vital Moral.

An incident happened between two Philadelphia business men about a month ago which might easily have gotten into the courts, as many a similar case has done before it. Happily it was adjusted out of court, and money and trouble saved for everybody, after each of the two parties involved were made to clearly understand their legal rights and what they would probably get if they went to law.

The case is interesting because the same thing might happen to any business man, and unless properly protected against beforehand, and properly handled when it arose, it might come pretty close to causing ruin.

One of these men owned a prosperous retail business in the heart of West Philadelphia. He sold it to the other man, under an agreement of sale which contained the following clause: "Provided that the party of the first part (the seller) shall not re-engage in the same line of business within eight city squares from the business hereby transferred, within five years from the date hereof."

Of course the object of this clause is obvious, and I need not discuss it. All agreements for the sale of a business contain some modification of it, if they are wise, but unfortunately they do not all contain it in such form that it can be legally enforced. These clauses are clearly in restraint of trade, nevertheless the law upholds them provided they go no further than to give proper protection to the buyer of a business. If they do go further, they are always set aside on the ground that they represent unreasonable restraint of trade.

In the case I am relating, the seller waited six months, and then opened a large store ten squares from the one he had recently sold. This was two squares beyond the proscribed territory, and if there had been nothing more to it he would have been clearly within his rights. He at once began to solicit within the eight squares, however, in three ways: 1—He advertised bargains in a paper that circulated almost exclusively in that district; 2—He telephoned his old customers within that district, and 3—He wrote his old customers, enclosing postals on which they could mail him their orders. Goods so ordered were delivered by wagon, but when the buyer of the other business protested, his seller said very confidently that he was not violating the agreement, as neither he nor his salesmen had set foot in the eight squares to solicit business, and he was only delivering orders which came to him voluntarily from people in the eight squares. The seller had a lawyer, and was quite stubborn at the outset, and it looked like a lawsuit for quite a while.

In the end the matter was adjusted and it was agreed between the two counsel in the case that this was clearly the law governing the matter, and that the court would almost certainly decide in accordance with these principles if the matter got that far:—

1—The contract barring the seller from a radius of eight squares was legal and would be upheld. I will discuss a little further on the reasons why this was legal and others seeking to accomplish the same result are often held illegal.

2—The fair meaning of the contract was that the seller should not go after any of the trade he sold to his buyer.

3—While he was within the letter of the agreement when he opened a store ten squares away, he violated the spirit of it by going over the dead line through letters, the telephone and advertising.

4—Under the agreement the seller had no right to approach in any way whatever anybody within eight squares from his old store, and any orders which he obtained in any of the ways above described were in violation of the agreement.

5—This not only includes the first orders, but all subsequent ones from those customers, even though the subsequent ones may not have been solicited at all. This because the origin of those subsequent orders had been in violation of the agreement.

6—The seller had a right, however, to fill any orders which came to him from people within the eight squares, provided they were brought to him voluntarily, by people whom he had not solicited in any way whatever.

This analysis of the legal phases of the case—it is almost purely a question of law—is supported by a large number of cases, and would in my judgment be the law in every State. The courts everywhere seem to look alike at these agreements by which the seller of a business, or a salesman or solicitor who has built up a trade or route, binds himself to stay out awhile. They all look on them as restraints of trade, and they don't like them for that reason. Nevertheless, they realize that without something like this all sorts of outrages would be perpetrated on people who buy businesses, so they reluctantly uphold them when they do not go too far.

A restrictive agreement like this will always be upheld if it binds a party to stay out of business for a limited time, say up t five years, and within a certai territory. What is a reasonabl territory depends on the partic lar case. A country doctor, fo example, might have a ramblin practice extending over twenty five square miles. If he sold ou a restriction binding him not t practice again in that territor would probably be upheld. Suc a territory would be excessiv however, in the case I have de scribed in this article, for th business is a local one, confine probably just about to the eigh squares named.

Agreements that overshoot th mark by containing a clause ex cluding the seller from re-engag ing in the same business at all, o ever, have never yet been upheld They are unreasonable restraint of trade, for they go further tha they need to to properly protect Obviously a merchant in Phila delphia, who sells only in Phila delphia, cannot insist that th man from whom he bought th business refrain from going int the same business in Pittsburg.

Putting a Few Wives in Jail.

If I had my way about it, I'd have a law putting married women in jail when they made their husband's lives little hells on account of spending too much money.

This ain't personal—my wife don't blow in a lot of money. The blowing ain't very good on what I make.

I'm thinking of some cases I've run across with some of my customers. One special case. You know, some married women put me in mind of blood-suckers. Love their husbands! Sure, love 'em to death, that's what some of 'em do. There ain't a mite of real love in their whole carcasses—they're out for money. They squeeze the fellow that was simp enough to marry 'em, and they're as nice as pie as long as some money comes from the squeezing, but let it stop and good night!

One of my customers I actually pity. He's got a load hanging around his neck that honest, if it was mine, I'd walk out on some dock and shake it off. It's his wife. She keeps him with his nose down to the grindstone twenty-four hours every day. I'll bet a dollar he ain't had a real restful night's sleep in five years.

The only reason he ain't caved in long before this is that he's got a cracking good business. But even a cracking good business can't stand everything, and you take it from me, he'll get it. When it comes I hope his wife will have to go out scrubbing floors and stand in dirty ice water up to her neck ten hours a day.

For it's her that'll get him, if anything does.

She's nagging him now to buy a Cadillac car. Makes his life a hell on earth, working for that Cadillac car. "There's Tom Brown has one, and he don't make the half that you do." I can just hear her singing that song. Will she get it? Sure she will! It's only a question of time. He's got his choice—a Cadillac car or plain hell.

Here's what he'll have to do to get it. He'll have to take the $2,000 that he had put away to build his store fifteen feet further back. He's losing business every day he don't do that, and he could put $2,000 in there and get it back in two years. What he's been fixing to do for five years is to put in fresh meats. He was raised a butcher and he knows he can make money out of meats from the minute he puts 'em in. A lot of trade are at him all the time to do it. It's a crime not to do it.

He simply can't crowd the thing in his store now, for there ain't room enough. He's got every cent he'll need to put the thing through, all salted away where he can take it out without hurting anything—but he's going to buy a Cadillac car with it! Get me?

It don't seem to me I'd let any woman put a thing like that over on me. Maybe I would—I ain't ever had to go through it. Because if she made my life a hell on earth, two can play the hell game. I could start a few little chain hells myself, and believe me, I'm some fireman.

You ought to see this woman. See her on the street and not know her, and you'd think she was the Steel Trust's wife. I understand she don't often go out with her husband, maybe because he can't afford to put on the lugs she puts on. Just stop a minute and get that—a married woman who hogs all the clothes money and then gets ashamed of her husband because he can't dress right!

Hold me, men! Hold me! I may do harm here!

Is it any of my blamed business? Yes, it is, and I'll tell you why. I have to watch that fellow's buying all the time. My house has set a limit on him—they're afraid of him—and I know it but he don't. He'd be able if he didn't have this tumor of a woman hanging to him to buy a good bit better than he does and make money out of discounts. As far as I know, he don't discount a thing now and he's lucky if he can come across in thirty days. Not because he ain't making the money but because it's going somewhere else.

Now that's the kind of a chicken that ought to go plumb to jail. She's no durn good herself and she's spoiling a good man. And believe me, there are more of 'em and they all ought to go to jail, durn all their hides!

mply that "fish" that has been ept in cold store for two months ay not be shipped in interstate ommerce. There was no special ention made of salt and pre-rved fish, so it of course refers all kinds of fish, fresh as well salt and preserved fish. If the ill were to become a law, as it ands now, it would do a great eal of harm to the trade in gen-al. Remarkably little interest as been shown all over the coun-y in regard to this bill. Prob-ly the salt fish trade has not id any attention to it. It would very important that everybody terested in the salt fish trade ould write to the committee in Washington, and address their tter to Mr. Covington, chairman the Sub-Committee on the Mc-ellar Cold Storage Bill, and set rth their arguments why salt d preserved fish should be ex-pt from this bill. It has been oven, and can be proven by ex-rt testimony, that both salt and eserved fish can be easily kept cold store for certainly a year fore it would show any sign of terioration, so there cannot be y possible reason why salt and eserved fish should not be al-wed in interstate commerce ring a period of one year from e time it has been put in cold ore. It would be very well if l those interested in salt fish ould write a letter to this effect the sub-committee before the earing takes place. This is a ery important matter and should e attended to at once.

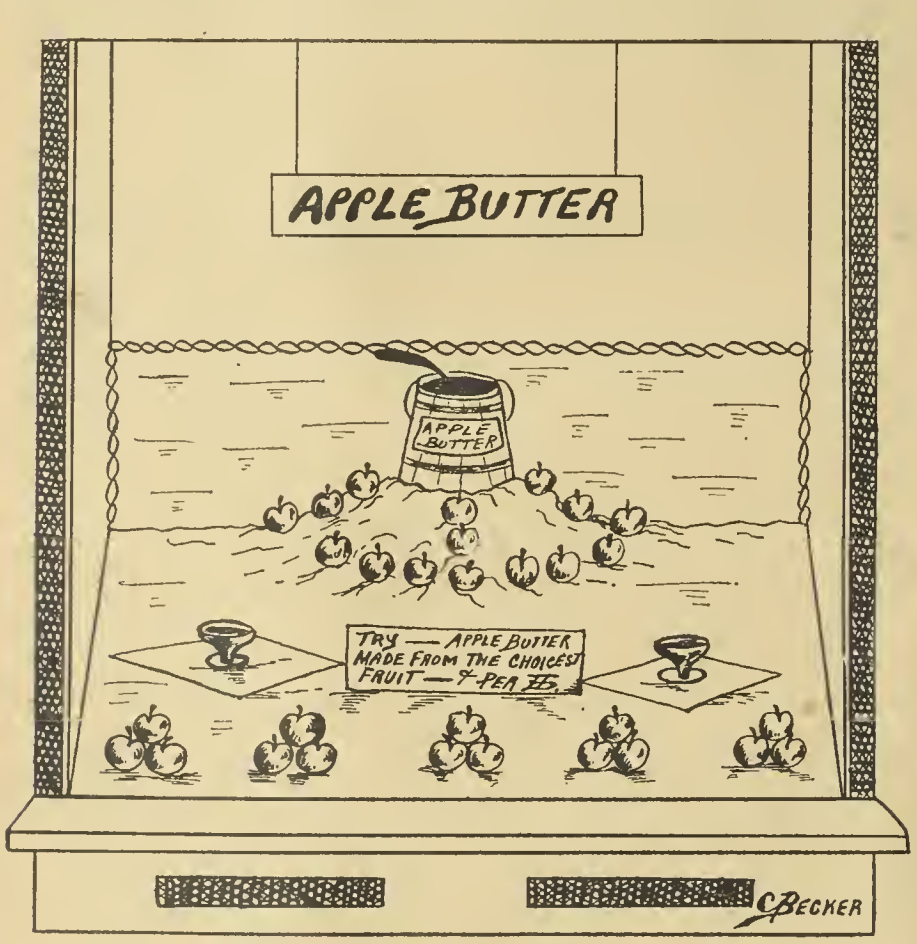
Apple Butter.

Make a display of apple butter. I find it a very good selling article at any time, but you will find a window display of it will double your sales. The illustration shows a neat and attractive trim. To arrange, first cover the bottom with green crepe paper or cheesecloth.



At the rear, in the centre, place a small box. Place some burlap bags around the sides to form a kind of slant and cover it with the green crepe paper or cheesecloth. Polish some very large red apples and place them in pyramid along the front. In the centre place a neat sign card with the name of the brand and selling price. At each side, on white paper napkins, display some of the apple butter in glass dishes. Place a bucket of the apple butter on the box or mound at the rear and arrange some large polished apples on the slant as illustrated. Place some of the green across the rear as a background and finish at the top with a twisted strip of the green paper. Suspend a neat sign card at the rear with lettering as in illustration.

Every grocer sells sauer kraut, if not loose surely in cans. T illustration shows a neat way to display the canned kraut. Third Contest on Phases of Sale of Nationally Advertised Goods

In answer to query No. 3, if Nationally advertised goods should be thrown out of stock what is the better way, refuse to handle or carry the goods in stock but avoid their sale? From my experience in one of the first-class retail stores in Pittsburg, will say no first-class and up-to-date grocery can be without this line of goods, and for several distinct reasons:—

First.

The cash customer. It is now generally understood and conceded that to succeed, enlarge and expand in the grocery business same must be conducted as nearly as possible on a cash basis. Therefore in discussing so important a question as No. 3 we must be guided by this fact to a greater or less extent. There is no person more independent than the customer with the cash, and these are the people it pays to do business with. These are the people who when coming in to purchase with the cash in hand and ask for a package of Kellogg or other Nationally advertised goods expect to get exactly what they ask for and nothing else. If they do not, they will go elsewhere. "Result," a dissatisfied customer, one of the worst assets a store can have.

Second.

Telephone orders. A mode of ordering groceries which is increasing rapidly. What is more natural than that the lady of the house has just laid down her magazine, perhaps the newspaper, or looked across the street at some of the numerous billboards. Everywhere is seen the result of the trained brain of the expert advertiser, employed to extol the virtues of this class of goods. Result, nine out of ten times these articles are so imbedded in my lady's thinker that 100-pound pressure could not hammer them out. Not much use suggesting something just as good, "a sure loss of time here."

Third.

The school kid. In our store here I can positively say one-third of the business is done through this source, either by verbal or written orders. If verbal can you lose time explaining the merit of some other kind of soda cracker if they ask for Uneeda biscuit. "Perish the thought." If written, can you risk bringing the wrath of the mother on your head by sending skimmed milk if she has sent for Carnation? "Shades of William Tell!"

Lastly.

After a brief summary of the above questions, I am firmly convinced that until all grocers get together, through their organization or otherwise, and formulate some plan of action whereby this "hog combine," I mean profit hogs, or that part of it that want to hog all the profit, can be made to see that the poor oppressed and despised grocer needs a little consideration and means to get it, he must if he wants to succeed (although it is perfectly understood that profit must be made up on something else) carry a full line of Nationally advertised goods. But consign them to the most inconspicuous and obsolete corners of the store, then display a full line of our own brands in such a manner as to attract attention, both coming and going, and by extra inducements and local advertising create a demand that will be an asset in the future and a crimp in the profits of the "hog combine." Then will he consent to live and let live.

By C. R. Breedin, President, The Manning Grocery Co., Inc., Manning, S. C.

As to disposition of unprofitable Nationally advertised goods, I have always found that it doesn't pay to refuse to sell such articles or to offer "something just as good" and not have the thing called for; on the other hand my method has been always to keep such popular though unprofitable articles until I could supplant them with something else.

If we have a number of customers using a certain article that we discover ceases to pay us a decent profit, we commence looking around for something that will take this article's place, goods of at least the same quality, oftentimes better; then we single out our main users of such an article and before they ask for any of their favorite we proceed to show them the new stuff, inducing them to try it with our guarantee of satisfaction or money back.

We have never had any difficulty in making a meritorious article go on these conditions. It's lots better to take the "bull by the horns" and have the first voluntary say about such a new article; it heads off the suspicion that you are trying to substitute and makes the merchant feel better. To be more specific, the matter is simply like this: Suppose you are selling coffee under a trade-mark that has ceased to pay you a profit and you want to cut it out. Assuming that you know good coffee when you see it, and you get as good an article in bulk for less money than you had been selling in cans, or, say, a better, put it in and do not wait for your coffee customers to come and ask for their favorite brand to tell them about your new coffee, but rather, make it a special point to try and talk up this coffee at such times as they are not asking for coffee or thinking of it.

By adroitly extolling the merits of your new article—and remember it must have merit—in the manner indicated above your customers will not get the impression that you are trying to switc them on to something else simpl for the money that's in the thin

I have performed this operatic time and time again, am doing now, and as long as I stay in bus ness I expect to keep on doing i since it's the only way I have ev discovered to keep from workin altogether for glory. The priz winning gentleman in your rece contest took the stand that to se Shredded Wheat Biscuit for co or possibly below cost was goo business, in that by so doing was the means of selling othe goods. Now I understand tha this article was generally sold i this particular market at the sam price, viz., at cost or less, conse quently I have been ponderin over this statement ever since read it, and, for the life of me, cannot grasp the point. Unde stand I'm not meaning any ac verse criticisms, as I do not deer myself an authority on any c these questions, but, to be fran I certainly would like to get thi gentleman's point of view just t experience the feeling of sellin goods at cost just as my compet tors were doing and at the sam time feel like it was a money making proposition.

I am a firm believer of specia sales at reduced prices, or puttin a premium on something to mak it move, for a limited time only This concentrates attention o your place for the time being a least, and if you have a good forc it gives a good opportunity t make new friends and customers This also gives your competitor an equal chance to do the sam thing from time to time on prob ably different articles, while no body's business is becoming de moralized, or at any rate shoul not become so. There's a big dif ference between selling sugar fo one day at 3 cents and selling i regularly at 4 cents. Now i Smith cuts the price of, say

We Are Thorough Believers in Parke's Unmatchable Coffee

This wonderful Coffee and its unmatchability created a sensation many years ago because it was cleaner, more correctly roasted and a better cup Coffee than what had been on the market. It was the best then, but since that time we have spent thousands and thousands of dollars on improvements, and profited by the result of experience in the roasting and cleaning to such an extent that to-day it

STILL STANDS AT THE HEAD.

Parke's Coffee is bought for cash in whichever market of the world is the most advantageous to select desirable Coffees well up to the Parke standard, and when this Coffee reaches our mills in Philadelphia or Pittsburgh, it is put through the various Parke processes, and when roasted and ready for packing, it is tested carefully for cup quality by men who have a Coffee experience of thirty years or more; and you want to remember that in those thirty years the nature of the Coffee used, the selecting, the cleaning, the roasting and the packing processes, have been revolutionized, so that so far as Coffee is concerned, we are right up to the minute.

We do not say this to be egotistical, but we can't tell our story without giving you the facts, because just "Coffee" would not have produced this immense business, but PARKE'S UNMATCHABLE COFFEE did. There was a reason for its existence, and that is the only reason that for years we have roasted and sold millions and millions of pounds.

Some merchants say that because we have a large business we are independent, but such a statement is not based on the truth, as no member of our company is independent, but all fully realize that we are absolutely dependent on the customers we serve; many of these were customers twenty-five years ago, and are with us to-day solely because they have been treated fair and square, and that is the basis of the Parke business.

Our business is the selling of PARKE'S UNMATCHABLE COFFEE, and if you will adopt it as your Coffee, either loose or in packages, we can readily guarantee you a decided increase in your Coffee sales. Cast aside all trivial differences of opinion, for if you had been in our position, fully alive to the changed conditions, and had had the nerve, you would have done exactly what we did. Consider that our many years of progress are the result of merit, and that if it were possible to transact a large business in a manner that would please every retail merchant we would be pleased to do it, but up to this time the recipe has not been found. In the meantime we are at your service for increased Coffee sales.

L. H. Parke Company

PHILADELPHIA, PA. PITTSBURGH, PA.

Cream of Wheat to 14 cents when there is no profit worth talking about at the regular price, Jones across the street will meet this price and perhaps take a whack at Shredded Wheat, which all of his competitors will feel it their duty to meet. When these fellows get through playing "peek-a-boo" with a string of their best sellers what will be the net result of such tactics? Some of them will likely get down and out, others, through tricks and unfair practices, will likely survive.

I know some people in our business have a hard row to hoe and some forms of competition that any decent man hates to think of, but to stay in the game we must run our business and not let it run us. To accomplish this we must think of our creditors a little more; too often a fellow thinks only of the competitor around the corner and his customers rather than whether he's making enough profit to pay his bills and live. I take the stand that the principle of selling a lot of goods at no profit in order to sell some at some profit is wrong, and the man who follows it up is skating on thin ice. If an article does not pay a profit get rid of it, slowly if necessary, but surely.

By J. D. Patterson, Durham, N. C.

It was once my intention to miss taking part in the contest this month, but as the time draws nearer the temptation "to get in" grows stronger. While I do not feel as much interest in the subject (running) as I might in some other, still there is a sort of fascination about your contests.

That word "diplomacy" used in this division of the general subject seems to have become more important, if not actually necessary, in business and in the professions. When I see the word "diplomacy" there comes to my mind at once insincerity and affectation. As between nations everyone knows diplomacy means an attempt to make the other side see and feel, about a dispute or question, to our advantage, rather than what is right about it.

Let us hope that too much "bad" diplomacy is not necessary in business.

In making up my stock it is my object to select such items, or

The New York Letter

The New York State Jobbers' Convention and a Summary of Its Proceedings. Free Corn Wanted. The Government Against American Sugar Refining. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

New York, Jan. 29, 1914.

Wholesale grocers of this city who attended the annual convention of the New York State Wholesale Grocers' Association in Utica last week are much pleased with the results of the deliberations and with various suggestions that were made during the meeting.

One of the most important matters considered was that of extending from 10 to 15 days the cash discount period. This extension was advocated in a paper read by Arthur D. Moore, of Corning, N. Y. There was much discussion of the subject. The general opinion seemed to be that the question was one to be settled locally and not by the association. The counsel of the association, D. T. Ackerly, advised that this plan of letting the matter be settled locally would be more advisable than action by the association, although he advised that the organization had a right to pass a resolution on the subject if it so desired. It was finally decided to send out copies of the paper by Mr. Moore and not to try to bind the members in any way.

Another phase of the discount matter was also presented by Mr. Moore in speaking of grocers who take discounts after the 10 days have expired, sometimes long afterward. Men who do this he said are simply discount thieves. He said that the original fault is probably with the wholesaler and the wholesaler's salesman.

The speaker was referring, of course, to retailers who take cash discounts to which they are not entitled.

Later in the proceedings it developed, however, that the wholesalers in their turn also take cash discounts to which they are not entitled. This was brought out in the annual report submitted by Secretary Nelson Gray. The secretary said that he regretted to state that some of the members are not living up to the cash discount terms granted by the manufacturers but are trying to take the discount after the period has passed. Such practices, he said, retard the progress of the association. He asked that all members be more careful. The jobber, he said, has no more right to take the cash discount after the discount period has passed than a manufacturer would have to withhold a part of the goods after the invoice has been rendered. He added that if the jobber desires fair treatment he must give fair treatment in return.

So it seems that the abuse of the cash discount is to be laid at the doors of both retailers and wholesalers.

Mr. Gray, in his report, reviewed thoroughly the work of the association and trade developments affecting the membership in the last year. He said that the activity of his office has been curtailed to a considerable extent by the advice of the counsel of the association. The feeling of good fellowship in the organization is stronger than ever before, he said, and as a result the organization stands on a substantial basis.

The secretary reported that his interviews with the manufacturers during the year had been highly satisfactory and that the manufacturers generally had shown a cordial desire to cooperate in improving conditions where possible.

A number of bills detrimental to the interests of the trade were introduced at Albany during the year, he reported, but none of these measures had been passed by the Legislature.

The secretary repeated a previous recommendation that the members do away with deals and the subsidizing of jobbers' salesmen.

The charges that the middlemen are responsible in large part for the high cost of living were considered by the secretary and emphatically denied. He spoke of the wholesalers as an efficient and economical engine in distribution, and of the way in which the jobber supplies the retail with a large variety of products which could not be bought by dealing with manufacturers as the latter cannot sell in comparatively small lots and carry the accounts of the retailers as the jobbers do. The secretary said that when the jobber's work is properly understood he can properly be classed as a philanthropist.

Mr. Gray said that according to a careful analysis one-third of the volume of the grocery business is now done below the cost of distribution in order to hold the other two-thirds with its small margin of profit.

For instance, he said, sugar represents one-quarter of the volume of the average wholesale grocery business and it is sold at a gross profit of 2 to 3 per cent, while the minimum average cost of doing business in this territory is 7 per cent. and in the metropolitan territory from 8 to 9 per cent.

The secretary urged that the organization continue its efforts to obtain from the manufacturers concessions in cash and other discounts until every line that is carried by the wholesaler carries its proportionate part of the expense. He said that all progressive houses realize that it is necessary to look not to the gross volume of business but to the net returns.

The election of officers resulted as follows:—

President, R. C. Stewart, of D. B. Stewart & Co., Ithaca; first vice-president, Sylvan L. Stix, of Seeman Bros., New York; second vice-president, H. S. Reynolds, of W. T. Reynolds & Co., Poughkeepsie; third vice-president, E. S. Truesdell, of Newell & Truesdell, Binghamton; treasurer, Howard L. Sills, of John S. Sills & Sons, New York; members of the Executive Committee, C. T. Wilson; Edward Cumpson, of T. & E. Cumpson, of Buffalo; E. Frank Brewster, of Brewster, Gordon & Co., of Rochester; C. F. Wheadon, of Barton & Wheadon, Elmira; Ben Marshlow, of J. J. Prentiss & Co., of Buffalo; E. C. Field, of Field & Start, Utica; Philip C. Staib, of Koenig & Schuster, New York; C. W. Maltby, of J. B. Maltby Co., Corning; A. E. Wilkinson, of Wilkinson, Gaddis & Co., of Newark, N. J.; Hermann Kartluke, of Liss & Co., New York; W. R. Harrison, of Matthews & Harrison, Kingston; Charles G. Eddy, of Harvey & Eddy Co., Troy.

Chairman of the Discount Committee, J. R. Ward, Jr., of Weidman & Co., of Albany; Membership Committee, O. B. Rowe, of J. B. & G. N. Rowe, Oneonta.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee Nelson Gray, of New York, was reappointed secretary and general manager. Dana T. Ackerly, of Breed, Abbott & Morgan, was reappointed as counsel for the association.

Even the comparatively conservative "Evening Sun" of this city takes a whack at the middlemen this week in connection with the new plans for expanding the work of the parcels post and the reduction of express rates. In its editorial, it says that the shipments of food direct from the farms to the consumers in this city and elsewhere will be vastly increased as soon as the manufacturers of containers perfect their products so that eggs, butter and other food may be shipped with entire safety by mail. It adds that such containers are sure to appear within a reasonable time, as inventors and manufacturers are now bending their ingenuity to the task of getting the right kind.

The editor says that if this development causes losses to the middleman, as of course it must, there will be little sympathy with him. According to the editor, the public are convinced that the middlemen have been holding back food and placing it in storage while its quality deteriorates until they can get their own prices.

Fire damaged the fruit packing establishment of Hills Bros. & Co., 48-64 Irving street, Brooklyn, Wednesday night of this week. The newspapers estimated the loss at three quarters of a million, but this estimate is declared to be greatly exaggerated. There are four units to the building and the damage was chiefly in one of these units.

The company at once began to make repairs. Business is being continued without interruption.

President Wm. Bayne, of the Coffee Exchange, sent his annual report to members this week. He takes a most optimistic tone in regard to the trade.

Mr. Bayne said that in the face of the business depression in most lines of trade the total sales of the past year have been, with one or two exceptions, as large as in any prior year in the history of the exchange. The margins deposited through the exchange amounted to more than $37,000,000, an increase of more than $22,000,000 as compared with the

WITH THE EDITOR

A Valuable Business Asset Easily Obtained.

Two men sat behind the writer coming in from the suburbs over the Pennsylvania Railroad the other morning. One was a stock broker and the other a stranger. The former said to the latter, apropos of nothing, but in tones that were certainly heard by three or four persons besides the writer:—

> "There's a man named ——— in the Reading Terminal Market that keeps the best chickens and stuff like that I ever ate anywhere. He's absolutely reliable—one of the few men you can telephone to and be sure you get exactly what you want. The other day I had some broilers from him that were absolutely the best I ever ate. Jim ——— was sick the other day and I sent him one of ———'s fat guinea hens to broil. He called me up on the phone afterward and said 'where did you get that guinea hen?' That was the rarest thing to come my way for a long time."

Truly a reputation like this, which men will extend by voluntary and gratuitous talk in a railroad train, is more to be coveted than gold and fine jewels. Few retail merchants have it, and the amazing fact is that every man of them could have it if he would. Why, when you analyze it, this magnificent send-off which the poultry dealer got simply credited him with a reputation for—

1—Selling good goods.

2—Reliability and dependability, especially as to telephone calls.

Is there anything exclusive about these? Certainly not. Any retailer can buy good goods if he wants to, and any retailer can be reliable. We know of no other business asset of one-hundredth part the value that can be so easily and surely obtained.

President Wilson's New Bill to Protect Competitive Prices.

The bill which President Wilson has caused to be introduced into Congress to prevent combinations among business interests to restrain competition or hold the price, will not do much, in the writer's judgment, which cannot be done now under the present law. It forbids any combination from (1) producing restrictions of trade or acquiring a monopoly; (2) limiting the production or increasing the price of anything; (3) preventing competition in manufacturing, transporting, selling or buying anything; (4) making agreements among themselves not to compete with each other, or among purchasers from them. All this is illegal now. Nothing which the new bill contains would make it illegal, in the writer's judgment, for a manufacturer still to compel a jobber, as a condition of permitting him to buy such manufacturer's goods, to resell at a certain price. Nor, probably, would it be possible to pass a constitutional law making this illegal. Courts have said over and over again, and must continue to say so as long as private rights are as they are now, that a man under no legal obligation to sell, may sell on condition if he sells at all.

Ventilating the Subject of Nationally Advertised Goods.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" is resolved to thoroughly ventilate the question of Nationally advertised products, and a glance at this issue will show how effectively it is doing it. First come several pages of papers by subscribers on one phase of the subject, then a digest of the food advertising in all the leading February magazines, and finally a comprehensive list of the manufacturers in this line who give retailers free advertising matter exploiting their own brands.

Nationally advertised brands have become a problem. There are several dozens of them, all regularly exploited to the readers of a dozen or two of the most widely circulated magazines. They have become familiar to everybody. Not one of the manufacturers of these brands sells consumers direct; every one depends on getting the groeer to sell his goods for him. On one side the manufacturers' advertising, by the influence exerted upon consumers, is pressing grocers to put these products in; and on the other side the manufacturer, through his own or jobbers' salesmen, or through trade paper advertising, is also pressing him to put them in. What shall he do? This is the problem and much is to be said on both sides of it.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" hopes that some manufacturer will see by the expressions of retailers who contribute to these discussions, that there is unrest in the retail trade concerning his products, and perhaps hostility toward him. If, seeing this, he does nothing to remedy it, he is a very foolish man.

The Attack on the Pensylvania Cold Storage Law.

The long-delayed argument over the constitutionality of the new Pennsylvania cold storage food law took place before the Dauphin County Court, Harrisburg, last Wednesday. The attack upon the law was begun by the large cold storage warehousing interests several months ago, but for one reason or another has been several times postponed. At Wednesday's hearing all of the alleged unconstitutional phases of the law were thoroughly gone into. Mainly, these were that the law confiscated perfectly sound and healthful food products by forbidding their sale at a time when they were entirely fit for food; that the law provided a State office for inspecting merchandise when the constitution said there should be no such office.

If words mean anything, the new cold storage law is unconstitutional from beginning to end. The Pennsylvania Constitution says that there shall be no State office continued or created for the inspection of merchandise. The new cold storage law does create or continue such an office, and several times describes its duties as "inspection." How can anybody not a sophist get around that?

Of course, it does not follow that the Supreme Court will declare the act unconstitutiona The Supreme Court is the cou of last resort. There is nobo to review and set aside its act therefore it is inevitable that the court thinks there should b a law on a given subject, an substantially approves of a la that has been passed upon it, may decide this law constitution and let it go at that. The law a thing of infinite resource, an it requires but a moderately in genious mind to find justificatio more or less convincing for th doing of any act whatever.

But the most monstrous featu of the law is that it may literall confiscate thousands of dollar worth of wholesome product every year—products which th public is anxious and eager t buy. This phase of the subjec has been discussed before. Egg may be and if properly handle surely will be, perfectly fit to ea though they have been stored fo more than eight months. Yet i they have been stored more tha eight months the law forbids thei sale, no matter how good they ar If this is justice, if it is commo sense, if it is good law, then th Legislature can pretty nearly pas anything it wants to.

A Chance to Start a Paying Store.

Hanover, Pa., January 24, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Do you know of any concern that is conducting a chain of grocery stores that would like to add another store, or could you put me next to a live young man with experience in the grocery business that would rent an up-to-date room in a fine section of our town (Hanover) to conduct a modern grocery store? The store is equipped with city heat, gas, electric lights, city water, cemented cellar; the room is fitted with counters and shelving; size, 20 x 60 feet; the building is three stories, with the Y. M. C. A. located on the two upper floors. I want the room occupied by a first-class grocery and if the right man applies there will be no trouble about the price of rent, and, if necessary, will furnish some capital. Any information you can give or suggestions offered will be greatly appreciated.

Thanking you in advance, I remain,

Yours truly,

Manufacturers, Read This From the Philippine Islands.

Cebu, Philippine Islands,
December 22, 1913.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I am broke—not bent but broke. I've got my name above the door yet but it's coming down soon. I have been selling goods for twenty years in Spanish-speaking countries, and some time ago I quit a good job to take a venture here (general merchandise store). The prospects looked good and I believe I would have won out had not a new Governor General appeared on the scene with a policy which practically reversed the policy of his predecessor, and worse yet, he began before he was on the job a week to cut off heads of high and low government officials. The legislative branch of the government has been turned over absolutely to the Filipinos. Naturally the Americans stopped spending their money and are saving up to get out. There is more to the story but I won't bother you with it.

If the walking wasn't so wet I would start for God's country tomorrow. However, I can hold on for a few months longer. But in the meantime I would like to get on with some house in the United States who has business in South America. I have sold other lines besides groceries and know the Spanish language and customs thoroughly. I take a lot of trade papers and keep up to date, and believe me, I can sell goods to our Spanish friends.

By the way, a couple of years ago I met a couple of fine old people who must be neighbors of yours. They live on Arch street and are, or were, in the sponge business. They were Mr. and Mrs. Wm. B. Burk.

Well, anyway, without wasting any more of your valuable time I want to make a connection with an exporter or a manufacturer who wishes to increase his business in South America. See if you can put me in touch with the right people. I will do the rest. If you can do this I will be eternally grateful. But whether you do or not I shall still be your "buen amigo," as the Spanish say. The "Grocery World and General Merchant" is the best paper of its class that I have ever read.

Also hopefully yours,
J. H. Taylor.

14—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because nationally advertised goods are always a happy introduction between a retail store and a person who may become its customer

¶ This belongs to the psychology of storekeeping. Everybody feels more confidence—more at home—where he or she sees familiar things. Nationally advertised goods are old friends—consumers know they are on safe ground whenever they see them.

¶ Imagine yourself going into a jobbing house and seeing nothing but strange and unfamiliar brands. Private brands, non-advertised brands, brands you never heard of. How would you feel? Wouldn't you be apt to think something was wrong and peculiar about the house?

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

Successful Co-operative Stores.

————, N. Y., Jan. 27, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Do you know of any form of a co-operative retail store that is proving a success? If so, could you put me in touch with same? If not, could you tell me of some good form of stock company. Would like to get a copy of the constitution and by-laws.

Also, would you give me the address of the New York State Retail Grocers' Association, and oblige,

A SUBSCRIBER.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" does not know of a single successful co-operative retail store, that is, a store that embodies the true co-operative principle as it is operated in England. There are several stores calling themselves co-operative, but all that we have seen are merely schemes, conceived in some selfish interest. These ventures have never seemed to take root in the United States.

The officers of the New York State Retail Grocers' Association are as follows: President, William Jeffrey, Hornell; first vice-president, Peter Becker, Brooklyn; second vice-president, G. P. Martena, Brooklyn; third vice-president, C. E. Durgin, Rochester; secretary, Charles Thorpe, New York; treasurer, F. J. Clark, Gloversville.

Apropos of an Article Published Last Week.

Berwyn, Pa., Jan. 28, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Your article entitled "Are Philadelphia Jobbers Unprogressive." As a disinterested party, neither being for nor against, in fact you might term the writer in favor of both sides, I indulge in the following opinion:—

The "Grocery World and General Merchant," may its stars never grow less, is a firm believer in co-operation of the retail grocers' associations, which is evident by your reports of the grand success which Mr. Smedley is making in forming the many local associations. This has a tendency to give the jobber the view that he may be losing trade to the members of the associations and he may feel a little aggressive toward you.

Of course the courtesy which is due you should have been extended at least in an answer to you by them.

But from a subscriber's point of view, I think the jobber has meant no offense, and as a whole they are good solid business men who have much experience and good judgment, who have their profits to make and obligations to meet and a duty to the world in many ways, and lest we forget, they have men employed and should be spoken of with respect for what they have done and are doing in common with us all commercially in this grand country in which we have the blessing to be able to live in and the great honor to be an American.

I for one am resolved to keep my health! To do my work! To live! To see to it I grow and gain and give.

"So say we all."

Yours respectfully,
A SUBSCRIBER.

Pennsylvania News Items.

The test case to try out the constitutionality of the new Pennsylvania cold storage law of 1913 was heard before the Dauphin County Court at Harrisburg last Wednesday. There were two actions before the court, an injunction to restrain the enforcement of the act having been filed, as well as the proceeding to test the clause prohibiting the consignment to cold storage of food products that had been previously in storage and then withdrawn. The test case proceeding was based on the ground that the operation of the cold storage act is unconstitutional, because its effect is confiscatory. The suit was brought by the Pennsylvania Cold Storage and Market Co., the Industrial Cold Storage and Warehouse Co., Philadelphia Warehouse and Cold Storage Co., and the Philadelphia Wholesale Fish Dealers' Protective Association. The injunction case was brought by W. H. Reebe, of Harrisburg, manager of the Brelsford Packing Co. Testimony was brought out to show that business had dropped off since foods had been outlawed by the enforcement of the act, and that the financial loss was considerable and there was no redress. The witnesses were H. Roland and F. H. Hurst, of the Pennsylvania Cold Storage; W. C. Martin, of the Philadelphia; F. P. Larkin, of the fish dealers; J. A. Guise, Philadelphia Warehouse; Robert Beatty, Jr., of the Industrial; Jacob F. Miller, of the Linfield. Mr. Larkin testified that the market for fish in Pennsylvania has been greatly restricted by the law, and that the small dealers had been driven out of business because they could not dispose of fish marked cold storage. He contended that many hundreds of pounds of fish had been declare outlawed by men who knew noth ing about the fish business. Th injunction proceeding was base on crates of eggs that had bee stored in Chicago prior to bein brought to a local cold storag plant, which the Pennsylvani law said could only be sold if th storing periods in both places ag gregated not more than eigh months.

Text of New Measure to Pre vent Combinations to Fix Prices or Restrain Competition.

This is One of President Wilson's P Bills to Forever End All Schemes Keep Prices From Going Whe Unrestricted Competition Would P Them.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery Wor and General Merchant."

Washington, D. C.,
January 29, 1914.

The daily papers have informe the public pretty generally of th introduction of President Wi son's five pet bills against a manner of combinations to f prices and restrict competitio Following is the text of the bi in which most business classe are interested:—

A BILL

To include within the meaning of every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations and within the meaning of the word "monopolize," certain definite offenses and to prohibit the same.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, that the words "every contract," "combination in the form of trust or otherwise," and "conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce," and the word "monopolize," as used in the act entitled: "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, and in any acts supplementary thereto or amendatory thereof, shall be deemed to include

Section 1. Any combination or agreement between corporations firms or persons, or any two or more of them engaged in trade or business carried on in the United States between the States, or between any State or Territory and the District of Columbia, or between the District of Columbia and any Territory, or between any State Territory, or the District of Columbia and our insular possessions or with foreign countries for the following purposes:—

First.—To create or carry out restrictions in trade or to acquire a monopoly in any interstate trade business or commerce.

Second.—To limit or reduce the production or increase the price of merchandise or of any commodity.

Third.—To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transporting, selling or purchasing of merchandise, product or any commodity.

Fourth.—To make any agreement, enter into any arrangement, or arrive at any understanding by which they, directly or indirectly, undertake to prevent a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or among any purchasers or consumers in the sale, production or transportation of any product, article or commodity.

Sec. 2. That any such contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, or monopoly, is hereby declared to be unlawful.

Sec. 3. That any person, firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, said punishment in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 4. That whenever a corporation shall be guilty of the violation of any of the provisions of this act the offense shall be deemed to be also that of the individual directors, officers and agents of such corporation authorizing, ordering or doing any of such prohibited acts, and upon conviction thereof they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished, as provided in the preceding section.

Sec. 5. That nothing contained in this act shall be taken or held to limit, or in any way curtail, the effect of the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled, an "act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

Another of the five bills is similar to laws passed recently in various States, making it a criminal offense to "discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities in the same or different sections or communities, with the purpose or intent thereby to injure or destroy competitor, either of such purchaser or of the seller." This leaves a merchant or manufacturer free to sell one market at one price and another market at another, provided his intent is not to "injure or destroy a competitor." HOLT.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed please find copy of our ad. which was run in our daily paper Friday and Saturday of last week. We run a similar ad. each week and change it each time. Please criticise same and oblige, McKenna Bros.

The advertisement enclosed was rather peculiarly arranged and displayed and to a certain extent was distinctive on that account. It was run at the bottom of a newspaper page and was four columns wide, the entire text being set in regular reading matter type. The advertisement might have been made more impressive, I think. I have already said that it was four columns wide. It was five inches deep and is here reproduced about one-quarter the original size:—

This advertisement would have stood out from the page a great deal more if the head, like the name and address, had extended clear across it. That little bunched-up head in the middle to my mind detracts from the strikingness of the advertisement, especially with the single column "Meat That is Hard to Beat" stuck in there where it doesn't belong. There should have been only one main head. I don't know what kind of a page this advertisement appeared on, and I therefore cannot speak as surely as I otherwise might, but I am inclined to believe that a plain rule around the whole of this advertisement would have set it off better.

The idea of this advertisement—news of the store told in a newsy way—is good. The method is a favorite with me, for I believe that properly done, it is the surest way of getting results. Especially from advertising regularly done. I think the heading might have carried out this idea. "Newsy Nuggets From Our Store," or "Late News From Our Store," or "Saving News From Our Store," the idea being that here is your own little newspaper containing all the crisp doings of your store.

In almost every advertisement that comes to this department it is possible to pick out expressions and often whole sentences that have no advertising value whatever, and which simply fill the advertisement with sawdust and prevent the real advertising in it from getting proper attention. In this advertisement I cite such expressions as "Our Butchers Would Enjoy Serving You," "Visit Our Store and Be Convinced," and so on. These are like "Satisfaction Guaranteed," and "Give us a Call." They are tame and hackneyed and utterly without value. You would not talk this way to a customer if she were face to face with you. Put nothing in an advertisement that you wouldn't say to her.

Note.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

Don't Waste Time Putting Sugar in Bags

It's a foolish waste of time for a grocer to buy sugar in a barrel, open the barrel, scoop out the sugar, weigh it (giving a little overweight every now and then), fold the bags, tie the bags, pay for the bags and the twine, when he can buy a CONTAINER of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, slit it open in five seconds with a pocketknife, lift out the CARTONS and sell them! That's the beauty of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR—there's nothing to do but SELL it; no work, no bother, no loss of time, no loss from overweight, no expense for bags or twine.

Franklin Carton Sugar Will Please Your Customers

Women appreciate the clean, white purity of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR AS SOON AS THEY SEE IT! They KNOW it's better sugar than they can buy any other way. They like the CARTON because it doesn't burst, fall over, spill or tear. They like it because they WANT CLEAN sugar. Once you start your customers buying FRANKLIN SUGAR in CARTONS, they'll always want to buy it and you'll want to sell it to them. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is the right proposition for both the grocer and his customers.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

Reports from the South indicate that offerings of the better quality of domestic rice are moderate and command full prices. Foreign rice is moving slowly at steady prices.

Spices are getting more active at steady prices. The grinders are taking the general list at quotations. There are only moderate stocks of peppers and prices are fully maintained.

Distributors seem well supplied with molasses as a result of recent buying. The demand is less urgent because of recent mild weather. Prices are about the same.

Spot stock of canned vegetables are going steadily into consumption, but mostly on small orders. Outside of corn the stocks in first hands seem to be within small compass and so there is little pressure to sell. The prices on tomatoes are well maintained at not less than 70 cents for standard Maryland No. 3 and 50 cents for No. 2s f. o. b. Baltimore. Some of the packers ask from 2½ to 5 cents more than these figures. There is only a slight demand for spot corn, but holders of stock of good standard quality are not trying to force business. The fancy grades are not plentiful and are firmly held. There is a good demand for spot peas of good standard quality but there is little doing in medium and lower grades. Prices are steady. There is an upward tendency in Southern string beans as the supply available for immediate delivery is small. The quotations are 75 cents for No. 2s, $1 for No. 3s, and $3 for No. 10, f. o. b. Baltimore, these prices being higher than any that have prevailed in several years. Offerings of future canned vegetables are not getting much attention except in favorite brands. State string beans are probably more active than any other line in futures because of the scarcity of spot supplies resulting from the small pack of last year.

California canned fruits are moving slowly but packers have little to offer in the popular lines

Goods That Are Being Advertised to Your Customers

"Grocery World and General Merchant" Makes Compilation of Products for Which Demand Is Being Created Through Leading Periodicals. Papers and Magazines Used as Basis Cover Entire Country.

[The compilation which appears below is the result of more thinking along a line which was given some discussion several months ago, viz., the advantage to the retailer of keeping posted as to what products are being advertised to his customers, so that he may get the benefit of such advertising, if the product is for other reasons a desirable one to sell. The list here presented includes practically every leading magazine and periodical, and products that are not advertised in at least some of them are hardly advertised in this way at all, although they may be in newspapers or in direct ways, such as sampling, demonstrating, etc.]

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Grocery World and General Merchant" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

IV.—The Cost of Installing and Operating a Moderate-sized Coffee Roaster.

By William B. Harris.

In addition to the initial amount to be spent for a coffee roaster, there are the installation charges to be ascertained before the cost of the machine will be complete. It has already been mentioned that some machines are sold with freight allowed to destination while others are shipped f. o. b. factory. After the type of machine has been selected, the freight charge on the shipment, if there is to be one, should be learned and same added.

There are three connections to be made when the machines are set up, gas, electricity and the exhaust for carrying off the gases from the roasting coffee and to be used for cooling purposes. The distance these connections have to be carried naturally figures in the intallation charge. It is not a difficult matter to learn just what has to be done to bring the gas pipe and electric wires to the spot where the machine is to be placed, provided both are in the store. If not, the companies furnishing the gas and electricity in the town will bring the same into the building.

The actual cost of installation is not large on machines having a capacity of ten, fifteen or twenty-five pounds. This charge would range between $3 and $10. To install a machine of seventy-five pounds capacity the cost would be between $10 and $25. The charge for connecting a bag machine roasting about 150 pounds at a time would range between $25 and $75, depending on the amount of labor required.

The figures in connection with the operation of the various machines are incomplete in some particulars, nevertheless it is possible to form some idea as to what it will cost the retailer to roast his own coffees.

The following table will give some idea of the cost of operation, although this will be found to vary slightly in different locations:—

Capacity.	Cost of operation per hour.	Cost of operation per roast.	Cost per pound.
10 pounds..	2c.	1c.	1-10c.
15 pounds..	2½c.	1¼c.	1-12c.
25 pounds..	3c.	1½c.	1-17c.
65 pounds..	7½c.	2½c.	1-26c.
75 pounds..	10c.	5c.	1-15c.
130 pounds..	15c.	7½c.	1-17c.
150 pounds..	20c.	10c.	1-15c.

The above is based on a roast of thirty minutes, which will be found to be a good average except in connection with the ten-pound machine, where it is sometimes possible to take off three roasts in an hour.

There is another item of expense which is not included in the above table and which is often lost sight of. That is the labor. The man who does the roasting must be paid for the time taken to do the work. It is all right to state that he can operate the machine at odd times, but this labor costs money and should be considered. At $2 per day of ten hours labor would amount to 20 cents per hour. This would figure 10 cents per roast. Right here is a very good argument for putting in a roaster of at least twenty-five pounds capacity, as it cuts down the expense for labor. The operating expenses, including labor, are not large, however, and are more than offset by the increased sales in the coffee and tea department.

Then there is the advertising feature, which at the lowest estimate is more than equivalent to interest on the investment and cuts a big slice out of the expense items.

Coffees freshly roasted and sold under the dealer's own brands, where his green supplies are properly secured, are certain to turn the small roaster into a profitable investment.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Samuel Jamison, owner of the wholesale produce commission business conducted under the name of John Jamison, the founder, at Water and Market streets, Philadelphia, finally succeeded in taking his life last Saturday, after an unsuccessful former attempt. Mr. Jamison was undoubtedly insane, for his life held nothing more than small worries, and he was independently wealthy. The business will not be interfered with.

The First Pound

¶ We often wish we could put a pound of the first Gurnse butter we ever made beside the present make in order to prove to people how absolutely uniform Gurnse is.

¶ This is one of Gurnse's chief advantages to retailers—they don't have to watch it. It stays right up to the scratch—the finest gilt-edged dairy butter made. You sell it with a money-back guarantee. Wrapped in brine-dipped parchment and sealed in cartons.

Packed in 20, 30 and 50-pound boxes—pounds and half-pounds— 35 cents. Prices subject to market changes.

No Worry Worse Than Constant Change

The contented, prosperous grocer is the one who isn't constantly changing his stock—throwing one thing out and putting another in. It is nervous work, fearfully unsettling both to temper and business.

The wise merchant adopts the best thing he can find from all standpoints and then dismisses that part of his stock from his mind.

You can do that with Rumford Baking Powders. After you have stocked them and once started them going, forget all about them and waste no time talking baking powder of other makes. You will find they will give perfect satisfaction to every user, and that every sale you make leaves a proper profit to you.

Rumford Powders contain nothing but phosphates, starch and soda.

The Package Is Enormously Important

¶ If you don't feel that we should talk so much about the unique package of Private Estate Coffee, you forget what an enormous influence on sales is exerted by the appearance of a thing. The package has made tens of thousands of sales.

¶ Of course it never makes the second sale, but Private Estate Coffee doesn't expect it to. The Private Estate blend is as distinctive as the little burlap bag—it is largely Mexican, and people buy it again and again for that reason alone.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no change during the week. Nobody is buying more than he needs for immediate wants; if the trade showed any disposition to buy a supply ahead the market would almost certainly advance, for the supply shows a marked shortage. There is no reason to expect any material advance in price, at least not before the end of the season, when some lines may become very scarce indeed.

Coffee.

The market for actual Rio and Santos coffee is not very inconsistent with options, which are weak. Actual Rio and Santos are steady to firm, but without any special quotable advance. Milds, meaning especially washed milds, Bogotas, Maracaibos, etc., are firm and show a fractional advance for the week. The reason seems to be small stocks on spot. New crop coffees will begin to come along in March. Java and Mocha are unchanged and moderately active, both lines steady to firm. To go back to the market for Brazil coffees, it is surely not one to speculate on, for nobody knows a day ahead just what it will do. The demand for coffee generally is fair.

Sugar.

Raw sugar is firmer and higher, and sales have been made during the week at a fraction higher. Refined also advanced late in the week to 4.10 and is strong at that. March 1st is the date when the reduced tariff goes into effect. It would mean a drop of about ⅓ cent per pound, but if raws continue firm the drop will not come. At least, it will not be felt, because the advance in raws will eat it up. The shortage and firmness in raws is still believed to be temporary, though future sales are being made on a firm basis well into March. The consumptive demand for sugar is good.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is unchanged and seasonably active. Sugar syrup is dull and unchanged. Molasses quiet at ruling figures.

Fish.

Mackerel of all grades keeps about the same, demand fair. Cod, hake and haddock steady to firm, seasonable demand. Salmon of all grades unchanged and quiet. Domestic and foreign sardines are still scarce and high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes show a little more stiffness. Nominally the market is on the basis of 70 cents for Maryland 3s in a large way f. o. b. factory, but there are rumors of sales having been made by a few weak holders 2½ and even 5 cents below that. The market, however, is some firmer than it was, though with tomatoes there is no telling how long it will remain so. The demand is fair. Future tomatoes are being offered, some fancy brands 10 cents below last year, but takers are few as yet. Corn on spot is selling moderately at unchanged prices. Spot fancy peas are scarce and wanted; prices on all grades unchanged. Future fancy peas have sold well; some standards, too, but not so many. Apples are very firm, largely because all apple products are. Something seems to have attacked the current crop of apples at the seed so as to shorten its keeping quality. California canned goods show no change and fair seasonable demand. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes feel a little stronger on the coast, but Eastern markets are unchanged. The demand is moderate. Peaches are low in price and rather inactive. Apricots are very nearly cleaned up on the coast, and there seems no likelihood of any lower prices this season. Raisins quiet and unchanged, as are currants and all other dried fruits.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are about unchanged and in fair demand. Marrows are a shade easier; holders seem to be not overly strong in their ideas. California limas have advanced 7½ points in the association's hands, but other holders are underselling this price and the situation is somewhat unsettled. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged and very weak.

Butter.

The receipts of fresh butter have increased considerably during the week, and the demand is very light. As a result, the market has dropped about 4 cents, both on solid and prints, nearby and Western. The quality of the receipts is averaging very good, but the market is unsettled. If the lower prices stimulate the demand there may be no further decline.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs are still increasing, and the market is only about steady, but without actual change. The demand is about normal. The receipts are likely to still further increase within a few days, and if so the market may decline further shortly.

Cheese.

The cheese market is very firm and stocks are reported light. The consumptive demand is good for the season, prices being somewhat higher than a year ago. No radical change seems in sight.

Provisions.

The consumptive demand for bellies, bacon, picnic, regular and skinback hams is fair, and the market is steady and about unchanged. Both pure and compound lard are steady with a good consumptive demand. Dried beef, barreled pork and canned meats are unchanged with a light demand.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple situation is very quiet locally, with a very strong undertone to the market, however, and not a great deal of stock offered. Nineteen thirteen crop, or cold storage prime, is held at 8¼ cents f. o. b. in 50-pound boxes for carload lots, while buyers are not inclined to pay over 8 to 8⅛ cents. Sellers, however, are not willing to concede this difference.

Choice is bringing 8¾ to 9 cents, with fancy held at 12 to 13 cents.

Raspberries are steady at 23 to 23½ cents in barrels.

and prices are well maintained as a rule. There is no selling pressure in any quarter except in occasional jobbing lots in which the labels have been worn. Some lots of canned peaches were moved at bargain prices during the week for this reason. Southern and Western fruits are dull and steady.

There is a stronger market for dried California prunes on the spot. Some large holders who have been underselling the market are now asking higher prices, up to the inside prices generally prevailing. The consumption is said to be below the average for this time of the year and this is attributed to recent mild weather. The strong tone of the market is due chiefly to the firm attitude at the coast. There have been some sales of cheap dried peaches during the week but it is said that the bargain lots have been cleaned up and the market is now firm in sympathy with reports from the coast. Apricots, being in small compass here and at the coast, are firm, although the demand is light. The local trade is indifferent to California raisins and spot prices are nominal although coast advices indicate a firm feeling on prompt shipments. Spot currants are dull but firm.

Flour is quiet but firm. Most of the buying of spring wheat patents is on the basis of $4.35 for flour in jute, but asking prices are generally higher. Most of the business is with buyers whose requirements are imperative. Outside of actual needs, the buyers generally refuse to pay more than $4.25. For anything in the way of deliveries beyond 60 days the mills are unwilling to book orders even at $4.35. On immediate deliveries this price may be shaded in some instances.

Butter has declined further in the last week and the market is unsettled and unsatisfactory. Supplies are coming forward freely and tend to accumulate in the hands of the receivers. It is believed that the consumption would increase if the distributors would reduce their prices more promptly to the new levels to correspond with the lower wholesale prices. On fresh creamery extras the sellers are unable to get more than 28 to 28½ cents. Fresh firsts are down to 26½ to 27½ cents and seconds to 24 to 26 cents. There is not much demand for storage butter except on the part of some of the chain stores. The prices range from ½ to 1 cent less than the prices of fresh creamery of the same grades. Process is slow, the best grades ranging from 22 to 24½ cents.

The egg market is unsettled. Arrivals are light and the reserve stock is being gradually depleted. Storage eggs are being offered more freely and prices tend in buyers' favor. Nearby eggs of fancy quality clean up quite promptly, but much of the supply lacks the size to reach top quotations. The best grades of Western eggs have a range from 30 to 35 cents. The fancy nearby eggs have a range up to 40 cents. Storage eggs of the best grades are quoted at 28½ to 30 cents. The fresh European eggs sell at 27 to 31 cents; European storage eggs at 25 to 27 cents; European limed eggs 24 to 26 cents.

brands, as are easiest to sell; give greatest satisfaction to buyer and pay the fairest profit, regardless of whether they are Nationally advertised or not. When a dealer makes up his mind that any given article fails to bring him a necessary profit, consistent with expenses, and the cost of merchandising, he can and should exclude that article (perhaps with a very few exceptions) from his stock. Dealers can do this because they do. And should because it is not right that the manufacturer should expect the retailer to distribute his products at the latter's expense. Undoubtedly the retailer is a necessary (evil) medium in the distribution of food products; at the best his way is hard, having on both sides of him those necessary objects of his existence—his creditors and debtors—scrutinizing his moves and criticizing his service, and the last named (sometimes) eating up his stock, gratis. If he succeeds he is envied; if he fails he's sued and shunned. If he sells too many Nationally advertised goods without profit he will fail to pay his creditors; if he sells too few of them, his customers "call him down."

It is encouraging to know that many manufacturers conform their prices to the dealer's reasonable wishes and rights. To that class of them the retailer is far more loyal, and will reciprocate with greater business than he will the other kind of manufacturers who are indifferent or worse.

The latter evidently believe that their products are so "superior" and their advertising so "supreme" that all men will fall down and worship them. But they will find out that even if they have "got a good hold on the world and a down-hill pull," loyal assistance or support from their subjects will make an easier pull and greater glory for them.

Speaking of loyalty reminds me of the great coffee house of Chase & Sanborn. They are non-National advertisers, except as advertisement is given their products on account of their merits, and through their retail agents. And that is sufficient. The quality of their goods is above chal-

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

Do Your Thoughts Wander?—Ever watch a clerk taking an order who had contracted the wandering thought habit? Gazing around—at nothing. Shifting from one foot to the other. Suppressing a yawn occasionally and exhibiting a general all around indifference sufficient to bring a "damn" from an angel.

Now this condition comes from pure mental laziness—thought wandering. It's chilling to a customer. It gives some the fidgets. Others it positively antagonizes. For the firm it's disastrous. For the clerk himself—the blue envelope, in time.

The point is this—if you are selling a yeast cake put a dollar's worth of interest in it. There is nothing you can do back of your counter that will impress a customer more favorably than by giving her your absolute undivided attention. All your fine personality, all your good looks and spotless linen and Sunday School popularity count mighty little unless you enter into every big and little transaction with that man or that woman, yes or that child, with a mind concentrated on that particular transaction. This is the truth.

"My Fruit Is All Used Up."—That's a February confession and the confession lasts all through March and April. Your California fruit hasn't begun to move till now—never does till "her own make" is gone.

So that the time for displaying, the time for profitable canned fruit talk is now. Your peaches may not have any better flavor than hers but they're certainly better looking. Could anything be more perfect in fruit appearance than the extra or even the extra standard California peach? Truly a dishful of delight.

Now then, isn't it up to us to meet a want and by demonstration and by enthusiasm and suggestive display make that want a keener one? There's no rest for the grocer. Our seasons are just as defined as that of the big stores. But there's plenty of rest and plenty of yawns and days of easy-mindedness for the "thought wanderer."

Buckle in and see what you can all do with canned fruit for a couple or three months. Open up cans and put them in glass quart jars—that's the demonstration part.

I believe in only handling Nationally advertised products which show a profit, all others should be thrown out of stock. If we keep it the only way to avoid selling it is to substitute. When you do so you create a suspicion in your customer's mind. Generally manufacturers who try to sell their goods at such a price as not to allow a retailer's profit sufficient to allow him a living, have on their product printed caution, "accept no substitute that the grocer tries to stick on you for the sake of a greater profit." We simply will not carry any product which does not allow us a sufficient profit to cover expenses and profit besides. I notice that the jobbers as a rule will not carry in stock any item that the manufacturers will not give them a margin on which they think just and proper. I can probably name twenty items on which the jobber's margin is greater than the retailer's. We generally are successful in persuading our customers to buy something else if we know it has equal merit.

By Geo. W. Kappelt, Erie, Pa.

Seventy-five per cent. of a grocer's customers are women.

They as a rule have their minds set on certain brands of goods. A woman is a persistent person and must be handled with care. Your best friend can easily be insulted if you tell her she does not want what she asks for. Display all Nationally advertised goods, put them out where people can see them, make them feel at home among the goods they read about and feel safe in buying; anything they ask for hand out cheerfully, then show your selling ability by an artful comparison of goods, and if you can talk as well as Nationally advertised goods you win your point.

Fifteen per cent. of a grocer's customers are men or children that are sent for one or more articles and must or should get what they are sent for. If it is a child it surely should have what it asks for; if it is a man he dare not bring anything different from that which he has been sent for. The larger a business, if it be a transient trade, the more diplomacy one must use in showing the difference between Nationally advertised goods that pay no profit and goods that are more profitable to sell. People always have and always will eat. The old-time grocer knew nothing of Nationally advertised goods, he sold his goods at a profit and used what he could not sell for himself. People bought more of the raw material and did more of the manufacturing themselves. But this is the twentieth century and we must keep strictly up to the minute. If a grocer wants to run first to the cellar and then to the back room for a jug of molasses or some other old style article, all well and good; he will always be in a cellar if he allows himself to think all people think exactly as he does. To-day people eat not exactly more but they buy more often and in a smaller way. Conditions are such that the working class, the class that make the world go round, must buy not what the grocer wants to sell them, but the goods that suit their requirements. Nationally advertised goods are so well advertised and known as a rule that even the cheapest trade demand them, and in order to make a proper success of business today they (the trade) must be given what they ask for. If a grocer decides to put the damper on Nationally advertised goods and fills his shelves with an unknown line of goods and places the well known line under the counter and hands them out only when a customer demands those and nothing else, then he is fit for the shelf himself.

I say these things not merely from what I think but from what I actually know and see around me every day. One person's ideas are not always equal to the task of refuting the ideas of a great many.

If certain goods appeal to the masses then by all means cater to the masses. If a grocer truly thinks he prefers to handle only such goods as would pay him a larger profit than certain Nationally advertised goods seem to pay, he must be very careful when he tries to swing his trade onto other goods.

If I was to cut out all Nationally advertised goods that did not pay a profit to suit me I would carry every article that there was a fair demand for, hand them out cheerfully and then use the utmost care and diplomacy and switch my trade onto the goods I would rather sell.

"If it (a Nationally advertised product) should be thrown out of stock, what is the better way to do it, refuse to sell it or keep it on hand but diplomatically avoid its sale?"

My answer to the above question would be, by diplomatically discouraging their sale. This can only be done successfully by studying the art of salesmanship, thereby becoming competent to sell goods and not simply hand out what is asked for.

By George E. Boyer, Duncannon, Pa.

We find it to our very best advantage to handle Nationally advertised products. It is a matter of fact that most ladies read the different magazines and keep posted on the best grades of goods, just as the well regulated grocer looks up the "Grocery World and General Merchant" for his best interests.

Suppose this particular lady comes in the store and buys 75 cents' worth of Nationally advertised goods. The chances are that she buys at the same time $2 worth in other products. That pays us a better profit.

By A. W. Biederman, Philadelphia, Pa.

If a certain product is advertised every week or probably every day, yet is not very profitable and I wish to discontinue its sale, I would not be without it altogether. I would just keep it on hand in an inconspicuous place in the store. If a customer asks for the article it is best to give her whatever she may ask for and avoid hard feelings.

Should something "just as good" not turn out as you represented it to be you might lose a good customer, just because you did not have what he or she wanted.

Therefore I say have it on hand, sell it when you must, but when you have an opportunity to sell the customer an article that you think will answer the same purpose, yet show you a better pro than the Nationally advertis article, let it take its place.

If it (a Nationally advertis product) should be thrown out stock, what is the better way do it, refuse to sell it, or keep on hand but diplomatically avo its sale?

It is my opinion that nothi should be thrown out of sto that the consumer asks for.

Keep it in stock if it is Natic ally advertised or not.

If some one of your trade as for an advertised article and y have something as good or may better, put both brands on t counter in front of her, expla the difference between the quali if there should be any. Tell t customer which brand you wou prefer her to buy and nine tim out of ten she will purchase t brand that shows you the mo profit, whether it is National advertised or not.

But before you become e thused over anything try it you self. Know the article's go points and where it excels yo other brands. Always be su you know what you are talki about so that when the custom takes it home and finds the goo just as you have represented y have gained her confidence a can sell her most any brand goods whether it is National advertised or not.

Study your regular custom and always sell the goods be suited to each particular on needs. Do not try to sell a qu ity customer quantity goo neither a quantity customer qu ity goods, because it usual causes embarrassment and eve tually loses a customer.

Answering the question "If (a Nationally advertised produc should be thrown out of stoc what is the better way to do refuse to sell it, or keep it hand but diplomatically avoid i sale?" I have to reply as follow

If a merchant decides that Nationally advertised produ should be thrown out of stock, has a reason for his decisio That reason may be one—

(a) Of expediency, i. e., t product may not be a profitab one to handle; or the dealings b veen the merchant and those om whom he buys the product ay not have been satisfactory.

(b) Of ethics, that is, the goods ay not be pure, may be short weight, falsely labeled, known be dangerous to health, or not the interest of the buyer beuse not up to the claims made r it or because it works positive jury to the purchaser's interest some way.

(c) Of expediency and ethics. If now his reason is convincg enough to himself to make m decide that he ought not, or ould not, or ought and should ot sell the product, it should be rong enough to make him give fect to the decision; and this ings us to the point of the disssion, and that is whether, havg decided that a Nationally adrtised product should not be his stock, he ought (1) hontly refuse to sell it; or (2) disnestly refuse to sell it.

The writer is of the opinion at the better way is to honestly fuse to sell it. I know that eat hosts of merchants will re- in chorus: "If we do that, the aler across the street will han- e the product and that will ean a loss of trade for us."

To this I reply that if that obction is so powerful, it would a reason why the merchant ould handle the product; and it be a stronger reason than the e he has for deciding not to ndle the article, he should be verned by the first reason. But ce he decides that his reason the stronger, he must "back" s judgment honestly; or prove his failure to do so that he has t the requisite business acumen d moral character to hold his ade in face of his failure to keep stock one article of National putation. Such a merchant uld fail in business at any rate, r he is the kind of man who uld give a drummer an order r an article that is Nationally vertised and because of that ct, even though the merchant ew that he would not be able pay for the goods on their ar- al. I mean by this that such dealer has not the judgment cessary to make him do what knows is best for his own busiss.

To diplomatically avoid the le of an article kept on hand is shonest, because if goods are kept on hand in a store the presumption is that they are there to be sold, and when a merchant, by diplomacy, tact, evasion, circumlocution, or lying (take your choice of terms) avoids selling an article to a customer who wants it, he is dishonest, for he pretends to be trying to sell an article when he is not. Once let a customer and the public find this out, and this merchant will lose the confidence of those who buy—his customers, both actual and prospective. This is infinitely worse than having a good customer go across the street for an article which the first merchant does not carry in stock.

Whether he shall explain to customers the reason why he does not carry a well known product in stock is a matter for the merchant to decide. The thing of greatest importance is that he shall be scrupulously honest in dealing with the public. This he cannot be when he "diplomatically pretends" to be doing, in a given transaction, what he has no intention of doing. Such conduct may be good salesmanship (and it is not), but it is not the common honesty of action which makes customers willing to take their merchants' words about the quality, quantity and prices of goods sold to them.

To admit that a merchant's business will fail or seriously suffer because he does not carry one article of National reputation is to say that he is already a failure in the sale of the products which he does carry in stock.

Honesty is the thing.

If a Nationally advertised product should not be in stock for any reason which seems sound and valid to a merchant, the better way is for him to refuse to sell it, explaining or not explaining his reason to his customers, as seems best to him.

Bearing directly on the two ways mentioned as to eliminating unprofitable Nationally advertised products from among one's sales, I should pursue the latter course. Because our price is very slightly higher than the price some seeded raisins can be bought for, and there are some people who can't look beyond a price no matter what the conditions are.

But there are enough who can, to give any grocer a beautiful Not-a-Seed business who wants it. Not-a-Seed Raisins are natural seedless raisins, whole, dry, delicious, no lye, no bleach. A piece of extremely salable merchandise.

article would undoubtedly result in a suspicion that you were not progressive and awake to the needs of your business. I would also attribute this supposed view of the consumer to the fact that there is no other visible reason for them to think any differently or any further than that.

As a result of that I am not in favor of either course mentioned heretofore. I believe that Nationally advertised articles should be treated at the time of price-setting the same as all other articles. The correct percentage of profit should be added to the cost. If this brings the selling price above the price which the manufacturers' believe it should be sold for, you will soon have the best proof there is how strong the pulling power of advertising is. For if the quality of the product plus the pulling power of National advertising still maintains or increases its sale we surely have no complaint against anyone.

I believe in Nationally advertised goods under these conditions. But when the burden of advertising has become too heavy for the manufacturer to bear, or he wilfully attempts to extend the sale of his products by taking in this seductive manner the extra cost to him out of the salary of, and without the consent in any way of a man he has never met and who quite frequently works as hard for that salary as does the manufacturer, I feel that National advertising has gone beyond its phrase of usefulness for the grocer.

I would take just one illustration. I wonder what would happen if the grocer were to establish the selling price of Uneeda biscuit at 5½ cents a package. I know that this is an odd price for such a commodity, but it simply illustrates the point. The grocer when selling Uneeda biscuit at 5 cents a package is just doing it for the pleasure of seeing his men kept busy and goods going out over his counter. For when he comes to look for his own share of profit out of this commodity it is not there, for lo, it has gone into National advertising.

Admitting the value of a Nationally advertised article as a drawing card when hitched to a cut price, would the value be any the less if the standard selling price were established right in the first place instead of partly right.

By H. F. Granzow, Ashland, Pa.

In answer to question No. 3 I would advise not to throw out of stock any Nationally advertised product or refuse to sell it, but tactfully restrict its sale, not to avoid, but replace it by another that pays a better profit.

How to do this is sometimes a hard problem and it can't be done where the particular article is the only one of its kind on the market, and it should not be done where its competitor is the same price, as the grocer has nothing against any article advertised except the matter of margin of profit. Better add to the selling price than cut it out of stock.

You know we grocers are just like the consumers, and won't take a substitute for an advertised article or one we want, except at a reduction sufficient to show a better and fair profit. There is no sense in knocking an advertised product and then selling the competing article at a reduction that brings it down to the same profit or no profit, which is often done.

After you have worked hard to introduce a brand that paid good profit and became an advertised article locally, your competitor gets next by having calls for it or through the salesman who tells him you sell lots of it at good profit and he puts it in and cuts the price and lo, you start all over again.

All the best salesmanship, tact and diplomacy won't sell some women something else when they ask for Baker's cocoa, Uneeda biscuit or Ivory soap, except you spend a lot of money and use the same tactics you did to get out of handling Arbuckles coffee many years ago. By that I mean that the grocer then acted as selling agents for Arbuckle without a cent of pay for years, and yet we kick because Larkin & Co. employ our customers by the thousands the very same way.

I don't think it is necessary to advise the "Grocery World and General Merchant" readers what diplomacy to use to get the temperament of a customer so that he can sell her everything at a profit.

It's the great majority that are outside of trade associations and never see the inside of a trade journal that keep our noses to the grindstone and make us all wish that we were only sweepers and helpers working for the "Ford" Automobile Co.

In answer to your question, contest No. 3, if it (Nationally advertised product) should be thrown out of stock, what is the better way to do it, refuse to sell it or keep it on hand but diplomatically avoid its sale? I would say don't throw the Nationally advertised article out of stock even if it does not pay you enough profit, but avoid diplomatically the sale if you can. But I can say this, that Nationally advertised articles, by keeping in front and diplomatically avoiding its sale, will help you sell the not Nationally advertised article, and to illustrate my argument I will tell just what I have done this week in my own store. I have purchased several barrels of fine soda wafers; they arrived at my store nice and fresh and crisp; the quality is as fine as they com I have opened them in the cent of my store, displayed Unee biscuits around the barrel, put sign on the Uneeda biscuits cents per package, contents package average 22 biscuits, 4¾ ounces;" put a nice sign my barrel of soda wafers "5 cen for ½ pound, average 40 to crackers to the half pound; t them, they are fine; taste on take one home, have anoth one." As true as I am a mercha I sold more soda wafers this we than I sell Uneeda biscuits in fo weeks, and what about my profi I paid 5½ cents a pound for the and retailed them for 10 cents pound against Uneeda biscuits. did it and you can do the san then, too. Before writing this article front of so many good subscri ers of this worthy "Groce World and General Merchant I have tested what I said above my own business and it work fine, and before closing my wri ing I will say, don't throw the N tionally advertised article out your store if they don't pay y as much profit as the not Natio ally advertised, but avoid the sa if you can diplomatically. Now for the Next Contest, to be Published March 2

Papers must be in this office by THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26th. The same prizes will be awarded as in previou contests.

CCXLIV.—How One Owner of a Trademark Lost His Right to Prosecute Infringers.

Several months ago, in the early days of this series, I wrote an article on the law of infringing another's trademark; what acts amounted to infringement, what the test was, what damages could be recovered, how to go after them, and so on. In the course of that article I stated that even where one man had unquestionably infringed upon the trademark of another, the courts would not punish the infringer if the owner of the trademark, in exploiting it, had practiced any fraud or misrepresentation upon the public.

A case has just been decided in the United States Court for the New York District which enables me to illustrate this legal principle, and explain it a little further. Almost all business men own some kind of trademark or trademarks, whether they have registered them or not, and it should be made clear to them that there is one way in which they may—by their own acts—be made absolutely helpless against infringers.

The New York case was brought by the manufacturers of Shaker salt, one of the largest concerns in the business, against another large company, the Worcester Salt Co. The Shaker people charged that the Worcester Co. had stolen the Shaker trademark and was selling salt under the name of Shaker and in packages that looked like the original Shaker packages. The court found all this to be true, but still refused to do anything against the Worcester Salt Co. because it found that the Shaker salt people had misrepresented the quality and purity of their own salt in their advertising.

As to the remarkable fact that the Worcester Salt Co. was without doubt infringing, the court had this to say:—

> I believe that the defendant (Worcester Salt Co.) is now deliberately attempting to pirate the complainant's trade, and I suspect that the change in 1907 to the two-pound red carton was a part of that effort, but of that I cannot be sure. (The Worcester Co. adopted the color of the Shaker package in 1907, but did not adopt the name Shaker until several years later.—E. J. B.) Until they used the word "Shaker" the plaintiff did not object, and I take that as some evidence, though of course not conclusive, that they did not think there was any danger of confusion between the two make-ups unless both were called "Shaker." Red is a common enough color and there have been at least two other red cartons of that size for salt for table use and more than two four-pound cartons. The color was very convenient in conjunction with the word "Shaker," because people who are used to the "Shaker" make-up, might be put on their guard if "Shaker Salt" came in another color, but without the word "Shaker" I do not think they would confuse the two.

Ordinarily, with the court feeling this way about it, an injunction and an order to pay damages would have been clapped on the Worcester Salt Co. at once, but not in this case. This was the misrepresentation which lost the Shaker people their chance of relief:—

All salt contains gypsum, and manufacturers try hard to get as much as possible out, so they can advertise their own salt as nearly 100 per cent. pure as possible. In advertising, practically every manufacturer uses the gypsum argument against his competitors and in favor of his own brand. No manufacturer has succeeded in eliminating it all, but the Shaker people did succeed in getting all of it out but 3-10 of 1 per cent. The most that any salt contains is 2 per cent. In spite of the presence of 3-10 of 1 per cent., the Shaker people advertised as if there were no gypsum present in Shaker salt at all. A great mass of advertisements were offered as evidence, and the following statements were found among them:—

1. "Shaker Salt is the only table salt that doesn't contain a percentage of gypsum."
2. "According to Government statistics you eat about this much (20 ounces) gypsum every year if you use any salt but ours." (To eat 20 ounces of gypsum with the defendant's salt you must eat about 2,000 ounces, or 125 pounds.)
3. "Shaker Salt is the only table salt that is absolutely free," etc.
4. "Every other table salt in existence contains a percentage of gypsum."
5. "No gypsum in it."
6. After saying that the salt is 99.7 per cent. pure: "This dread impurity is entirely eliminated," etc. (the .3 per cent. is certainly here stated by inference not to be gypsum.)
7. "Our own process is the process that removes all gypsum."
8. "Every particle of gypsum."
9. "Our process is the only one which absolutely removes them."
10. "Shaker Salt is made absolutely pure."
11. "Entirely removes these impurities."

As a matter of fact every one of the statements was untrue. No actual harm was done the consumer, however, for Shaker salt contained less gypsum than other brands and was therefore the purest salt on the market. The public was not being led by the misrepresentations to buy something poorer than it might have bought—it could not buy salt containing less gypsum, for none was made.

In spite of all this, the court held that there was misrepresentation, sufficient to deprive the Shaker salt people of their right to punish the Worcester Salt Co. for the latter's undoubted infringement. The court said that if the Shaker salt people had only said something like the following, they would have been all right:—

> We make the purest salt on the market, that which contains the least gypsum of any. Gypsum is a very dangerous substance, causing disease, and by eating our salt you expose yourself much less than by eating any other. The difference is so great that we have only one-third as much as our next best competitor.

Let us look squarely at the r sult of the application of this e tablished principle of law. I ma have adopted for my use a trad mark, consisting of name, mott design or what not. I may ha spent millions of dollars adve tising that trademark until it re resents an exceedingly lar value to me. You may con along with a brand that is an a solute copy of mine—the sam package, the same name—and a little while you completely d moralize my business. I go in court and ask for an injunctio against you. I show the pac ages—they are identical or near so, and the court is about rea to grant the injunction and ord complete accounting. If at th juncture you can come forwa and show that in my advertisin or on my labels, or in my gener business practices, I have ma false or exaggerated statemen about the quality or character my goods, the court will refu me all relief, and send you o to proceed with your plunderin

It seems like a tremendous pe alty for what may be a very slig offense; nevertheless it is the la and there is no getting away fro it.

Another illustration of the fa that for owners of trademarks, for other business men, hones —as nearly absolute and literal possible—is the best policy.

Ain't This Disgusting?

D'ye know, there are some fellows in business that I don't believe the good Lord ever meant to be there. I dunno what he meant 'em to be, but I can't dope out that His judgment was so bum that He ever meant 'em to be business men.

They ain't cut out for it, that's the whole of it, and the funny part is that a big bunch of fellows that you think ain't cut out for it are in it and make out all right.

Then there's another big bunch of fellows that you'd size up as born for business, and they ain't worth shucks.

What's the answer?

Now take one of my customers. Good man, but as queer as a dill pickle with cologne on it. I heard him talking to a woman the other day in a way that if I tried it on a customer of mine he'd try to kick me. I say try to kick me because if I saw he was aiming to, I wouldn't be there when he landed. I may be fat but when I have to be I'm middling quick on my hoofs.

This woman was in there buying stuff just like anybody else, and he was waiting on her. She asked for one or two things, and kicked about a price, and every time he would talk sarcastic like "why don't you see what you can do at Jackson's?" "Why don't you go to Jackson's first?" "Jackson's might sell it cheaper," and a lot of guff about Jackson's.

The woman didn't get mussed up about it—she passed it off with a laugh. She sort of jollied the old man, but he wasn't jollying her. He meant it and he was a little ugly. He had something in his mind—I didn't know what it was. When she had gone he came back to me to talk business.

"I'll let her see what I think of her," he said. "She can't put anything over on me and I not know it."

"What's she up to!" I said.

"Been buying some of her stuff over at Jackson's," he said, real mad. "Dealt with me for ten years and her mother before her. I saw Jackson's man go down there. I just wanted her to see I know it, that's all."

"But good Lord, old man!" I said, "she has a right to, ain't she? Does she owe you any money?"

"No, she don't owe me any money," he said, "but what's she want to sneak off there for, as if I hadn't treated her fair?"

Say, when you get handed something like that, and see that a fellow honestly feels that way, you don't know what to say, somehow. I might have talked to him about selling her something being better than selling her nothing, and talked about being pleasant to her so she'd come all the way back, and so on, but honest to goodness, I don't believe it would have done a blamed bit of good.

There was one thing I thought up after I left him that I ought to have give him, and that was this: Why was Jackson's man able to get her to go there? Why didn't she say, "No, I deal with so-and-so and have for ten years. His store is perfectely satisfactory and I don't want to go anywhere else?" That's a point, ain't it?

What d'ye think another road man told me the other day his own house had done? He has a customer who is slow but as good as wheat. He's in two businesses and don't have enough money to run both, but he holds a lot of property that would let him pay four dollars for every one owes.

When his last bill came due was short and wrote this hou asking for another thirty days that bill. They wrote back a said no, and then put somethi else in their letter that made all the worse. The custon showed the letter to the salesm and was sore as four boils. said "since you have shown yo lack of confidence in us by p chasing considerable quantities goods from a competitor, we not feel that you should ask for any further favors. We sh therefore expect remittance in f by return mail."

Wouldn't that freeze your f if you was a salesman for t house, trying to sell goods? T fellow that told me about it w plumb sick.

Think of a great big busin house doing a boneheaded th like that!

I don't expect anybody to l it when a customer gets av from him. It don't feel good know that; I've had 'em esc from me. But holy hokey, I expect 'em not to get mad show it. Seems to me the f thing to look at is why they w That's what I always try to next if I can. I've slipped somewheres. My stuff wasn't right, or the price was wrong, maybe the customer had cause kick at me or at the house. Wh ever it is, it's a slip-up, and little job is to put ashes on Ain't that right? Maybe the c tomer ain't gone so far I can't him back.

But I have a swell chance get him back if I go in his st and spit in his eye, don't I? George!

The regulations issued by the epartment of Agriculture De-mber 22, 1913, governing the portation of potatoes into the nited States, made it incumbent any country not under quar-tine desiring to offer potatoes export to the United States st to declare an effective quar-tine prohibiting the entry into ch country of potatoes from y country or district quaran-ned by the United States. This eant that Bermuda or any other untry not covered by quaran-ne would first have to take ex-nsive quarantine action against foreign countries under quar-tine by the United States as to tato importations.

By an order issued January 23, 14, by the acting Secretary of griculture, foreign countries not der quarantine are given the ernative of either forbidding law the exportation to the nited States of all potatoes not me grown, or quarantining ainst all countries now covered United States quarantine as iginally provided.

The other provisions of the reg-ations remain unchanged.

Two Lincoln Birthday Trims

The two illustrations suggest neat window displays for Lincoln's Birthday.

No. 1.

The pyramid of fruit is arranged in the following manner. First cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. In the centre in front place a neat sign card with lettering as in illustration. At each side place a pyramid of vegetables, with a stalk of choice celery on top. In the centre at the rear make a pyramid of boards or boxes and cover with white crepe paper. Finish at the edges with a neatly trimmed piece of sapling; it is very suggestive and prevents the fruit from rolling. Along the bottom place grapefruit, then oranges, lemons, apples and on top grapes. Make the background of twisted strips of red, white and blue crepe paper, as in illustration, using all the colors in each cluster.

No. 2.

The log cabin trim is arranged in the following manner. First make the little cabin in proportion. It should correspond with the size of the window in which it is placed. About sixteen inches in front, also along the sides, and about eight inches high at the rear with a sl roof, is a good sized cabin and suitable for a large window. Ge wooden box about the size stated and saw the three sides so a sl roof can be made or make a wood frame. Get some saplings ab two inches in diameter, saw them in two lengths and tack to the b or frame. Make the chimney of pasteboard. Thin a little stove pol with water and paint over the cardboard to make it look like dull g stones. Make some irregular lines with white paint or chalk for mo between the stones. To arrange the trim, first make a mound at rear with some different sized boxes, boards, etc. Cover the bott all over with cotton. In the corners in front place cranberries, th make a semicircle of fruit along the front of the window. Now pl the cabin in the centre on the elevation, fasten the chimney to the si and nail several narrow little strips of wood to imitate the door a windows. Place some cotton on the roof. Make a rough little fen of saplings or branches. Place a few branches in the rear, trimmed look like trees. Sprinkle artificial snow on the cotton. Cover t entire rear with a medium shade of blue crepe paper.

Inside of the New Pittsburg (Pa.) Retailers "Co-operative" Buying Enterprise

Much Has Been Published About It in Daily Papers. Heralded as a Gigantic Scheme to Open Co-operative Cash Stores. Proves to Be Promoting Scheme by C. C. Truax, Ex-salesman for Staley Starch Co.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

Pittsburg, Pa., Feb. 5, 1914.

Some information has been obtained regarding the "United Retail Grocery Stores' Co." and the "Pittsburg Wholesale Grocery Co." which indicates that these schemes are not the great disinterested philanthropic enterprises that they have been held up to be. During the last few days the local newspapers have published considerable matter about them, the following being a sample article:—

GROCERS TO COMBINE.

Plan to Eliminate Middlemen by Manufacturing Own Commodities.

Pittsburg, Feb. 1.—A large manufacturing plant which will produce 1,687 grocery commodities and sell them at about 30 per cent. less than the people are now paying will be a reality in Pittsburg before many months, according to C. C. Truax, president of the Pittsburg Wholesale Grocery Company.

The company is composed of retail grocers of the Pittsburg district, and the object is to do away with the middleman. Throughout the United States there will soon be fifteen such organizations and all will be affiliated with the United Grocers Company, of Toledo, Ohio.

The Pittsburg company plans to eliminate the expense of wholesale grocer credits, commercial salesmen, advertising and brokers' commissions. Each grocer is a stockholder.

These articles have been copied all over the United States.

The enterprise looks like a promoting scheme on the part of one C. C. Truax, who formerly peddled the stock of the A. E. Staley Starch Mfg. Co., of Baltimore. Truax is said to be a very clever promoter, and to have made $20,000 in one year selling Staley starch to retail grocers.

The Pittsburg Wholesale Grocery Co. and the United Grocery Co. are separate corporations, but are working together. The first is a Delaware corporation with $1,000,000 capital. Shares are $10 each. The avowed object of the company is to "buy up and establish grocery stores throughout the country and buy and sell for cash and to buy directly from the producer." The officers are president, A. L. Evans, a former salesman for a Baltimore house; vice-president, A. H. Evans, a local lawyer; secretary, H. C. Mitchell, local representative of the St. Joseph and Grand Island Railroad; treasurer, J. L. Harris, formerly employed by a local steel company. Not one of these has any grocery experience so far as can be learned.

The Pittsburg Wholesale Grocery Co. is also a Delaware corporation with $1,000,000 capital. Stock is now being sold. The real plans and status of this concern have been kept from the public. The company gets some of its mail at Butler, Pa., and also has headquarters at Toledo, Ohio. Its chief promoter, Truax, was formerly engaged in business in Fostoria and Fremont, Ohio, where there was some discussion of his business methods. All of the officers and directors save the treasurer, a man named Stevenson, are said to be retail merchants in towns near Pittsburg. Stevenson was formerly cashier of the Farmers' National Bank of Emlenton. A full list of officers is as follows: President, C. E. Foringer; vice-president, G. B. Fiscus; secretary, L. P. Rearick; treasurer, C. F. Stevenson; directors, Frank L. Groff, Berlin; J. F. Lynch, Brownesville; Ira Powell, Rochester, N. Y.; B. W. Hawes, Cherry Tree; Charles Fleckenstein, Point Marion; W. J. Stilley, Bruceton; G. B. Fisch, Leechburg; W. J. Kennedy, Mars; L. A. Leathers, Brookville; G. R. Rose, Bellevue; Ira J. Schelley, Altoona, and O. B. Hammer, Tyrone.

It can be said that the scheme is not inspired by retail grocers or by the trade at all, but is a promoting scheme of Truax, whose past business record is now being investigated.

The Toledo, Ohio, end of the scheme opened with a great flourish of horns last Wednesday. In that city it does business as the "United Grocers' Company," and has headquarters in the Second National Bank Building. Truax is the president, J. H. Hirzel, of Detroit, Mich., vice-president; H. E. Wetherell, Toledo, secretary and treasurer, and the directors are as follows: C. C. Truax, Toledo; H. E. Wetherell, Toledo; R. R. Nichols, Pittsburg; J. H. Hirzel, Detroit; J. C. Smith, Newark, N. J.; C. B. McConahy, Van Wert, Ohio; C. J. Jacobs, Wilmington, Del.; G. R. Forbes, Pittsburg; J. D. Dunfield, Toronto; E. L. Bucklen, Greensburg, Pa., and J. W. Babcock, New York.

The foolish and exaggerated way in which the promoters are exploiting the scheme is shown by the following extract from an interview with Truax, published in last Wednesday's issue of the Toledo "Times":—

The company has erected a large storehouse in Pittsburg, where the company has been organized by the local establishment, the Pittsburg company, having a capital of $1,000,000. Supplies have already started pouring in there, officers of the company say.

The cost of the groceries will be reduced, officers of the company say, by the elimination of commercial salesmen and the cost of credit, the cost of stock by a groceryman being a guarantee of his payment of bills incurred by the company. C. C. Truax, president of the company, says that he expects nearly all of the retail grocers in the United States will enter in the combination.

It is the plan of the company that each grocer will buy stock to the amount of 10 per cent. of his annual purchases from the company. This purchase of stock guarantees payment of the grocer's accounts. When all the stock is sold the company will do an annual business of $10,000,000 with its own merchants.

The company will have from sixteen to twenty large wholesale grocery companies in every part of the country and all will participate in the gigantic buying power thus created.

There will be cash redeeming coupons in the goods put up by the company for the consumers and these coupons will be worth from 10 to 15 per cent. of the selling price of the goods.

More than 2,000 different articles will be put up by the grocers' company, covering everything in the grocery line.

R. E. WOODS.

How Many Unprofitable Nationally Advertised Goods Can a Grocer Afford to Handle ?

The concensus of opinion, as expressed in last week's contest papers, was that a retailer who had a call for a nationally advertised product, should not throw it out of stock even though it was unprofitable, but should keep it as a matter of business policy. For the convenience of his customers, in other words.

The next contest subject is this:—

4—If it should not be thrown out of stock, how far should selling such unprofitable articles go? In other words, how many such unprofitable articles can a retailer afford to sell and charge the loss to service?

In other words, where shall he draw the line? How many unprofitable articles can he afford to keep? Where is the danger line? Can the thing be gotten down to a percentage?

Philadelphia Grocer's Effort to Build Up Parcels Post Business

Something of the Plan Just Launced by the Fluke Company. Various Specialities Advertised With Parcels Post Rates to Various Points. A Specimen Page. New Parcels Post Rice Scheme.

Gradually retail grocers, especially, however, those of the cities, are taking up parcels post and are endeavoring to turn it in some way to their own account. The "Grocery World and General Merchant" has obtained a copy of a very good-looking booklet issued by the Thos. C. Fluke Co., retail grocers, 1309 Walnut street, Philadelphia. It is called "Fluke's Parcels Post Specialties," and advertises a number of specific things, at given prices, telling also what it will cost to ship the various articles by parcels post to the various zones into which the country is divided by the law. On some of the articles advertised the Fluke Co. pays the postage itself, and on others the purchaser must pay. The book is quite comprehensive and complete, and is worthy the emulation of other grocers who think they see in the parcels post law a chance to build up a mail-order business of their own. The articles advertised in the Fluke book are tea, coffee, cocoa, caviar, hams, mushrooms, French sardines, confectionery, figs, gelatine, jams and jellies, nuts, honey, sauces, biscuits, bread, patent flours and foods, cheese, spiced seasoning, soup capsules, soaps, olive oil, soups, plum pudding, brushes, chamois skins, cigars. In the back there is a table giving various parcels post information. This shows that the first zone is anywhere within fifty miles from the starting place, the second zone, from 50 to 150 miles, the third 150 to 300, the fourth 300 to 600, the fifth 600 to 1,000, the sixth 1,000 to 1,400, the seventh 1,400 to 1,800, and the eighth more than 1,800.

A page of the Fluke catalogue is here reproduced in order to show the style and the manner in which the postage rates are quoted.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant's" attention has also been called to an effort the "Prairie Rice Plantation" of Little Rock, Ark., is making in the East to build up a parcels post mail-order business in rice. The following advertisement has just appeared in several Eastern daily papers, occupying just about this size:—

The New York Letter

The Condensed Milk Decline. Retailer's Right to Give Color With Oleo. Problem as to Enforcement of Net Weight Law Against Goods Packed Before It Passed. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

New York, Feb. 5, 1914.

A number of domestic manufacturers of condensed milk this week announced reductions in prices. The cuts amounted to 20 to 25 cents per case. No special explanation was given as to the reason for reducing prices at this time. It is said, however, that the manufacturers felt obliged to take this action in order to meet the competition of imported milk under the new tariff law.

The importers were apparently not disturbed by the cut. Several members of importing firms were interviewed and said they can meet the new prices and still have a fair margin of profit. It was also said that if the domestic manufacturers made even a further cut the importers would be able to meet it. It seems to be conceded, however, that the margin at present prices is not large, but if it became necessary the foreign producers would be asked to lower prices to the importers, if possible.

One of the domestic factors said that there have been improvements in methods of manufacture and that other economies have been effected in various ways, all of which enabled the domestic manufacturers to reduce their prices to the present level. He did not believe that there will be any further reductions for some time to come if at all.

The right of a retail grocer to give away coloring matter to the purchaser of oleomargarine is being tested in a case argued Wednesday in the Court of Appeals at Albany. Peter H. Van Kampen, of Brooklyn, is the defendant in the case. He sold a pound of oleo to an agent of the Department of Agriculture and at the same time gave him the coloring material.

The State law which prohibits a tificial coloring of oleo also pr hibits the dealers from giving aw coloring material. The prohibitic against giving away the colori liquid was introduced in the law an amendment after the practice handing out the color was start by a number of the retailers on t suggestion of the oleo manufa turers who provided the colori material which they give to the gr cers with sales of oleo.

In the test case, Wm. C. Bre appeared for the defendant an argued that the law is unconstitu tional. He held that there is notl ing harmful in the coloring materi and that the Legislature has n power to pass a law prohibitin anybody from making gifts in th way.

The Attorney-General's offic represented the prosecution. It wa maintained by the assistant Atto ney-General that the prohibitio against artificial coloring of ole would be nullified if the dealer wer permitted to hand out with eac sale of the product a package c the coloring material. In doing th he said the dealer was really sug gesting to the buyer that he colo the material to make it look lik butter. It was a suggestion, h said, from the retailer to the buye to violate the law. The butter s colored could be used afterwar not only in private consumption bu also in hotels and public eatin houses in which the public woul be deceived by being served wit oleo instead of butter. It was con tended that the law applied only t cases in which the coloring materia was given out at the exact tim that the sale of the oleo was mad and that therefore the gift of col oring material and sale of oleo wer really parts of the same transactio

The court heard the argument and will hand down the decisio later.

WITH THE EDITOR

The Sears-Roebuck Business for 1913.

A brief extract from the 1913 report of Sears, Roebuck & Co., the Chicago mail-order house, published elsewhere, shows a business of $91,619,247 for last year, which is over fourteen million more than their 1912 business! It also shows that the net profits amounted to 21.17 per cent. on the common stock, as against 19.34 per cent. in 1912.

Every cent of this business was done by mail, for Sears, Roebuck & Co. do no business except by mail, and every cent of it was done in territory which is already supplied, in some fashion, by regular retail stores. Somebody said once that the only asset of the mail-order houses was the inefficiency of the regular retailer, and that every dollar of their business was done because some merchant was sleeping at his post. This is exaggerated and untrue. No matter how good the local stores are, there will always be consumers who see romance and novelty in buying from a distant concern's catalogue. These alone would make a respectable mail-order business, but not one-hundredth part as large as the present one. The writer's strong conviction is that all but a very small part of the modern mail-order business comes from consumers who would give their local stores the preference, did they not believe—sincerely—that the mail-order house offers them better goods for less money.

The 1913 report of Sears, Roebuck & Co. suggests the following considerations:—

1.—In the first year of the parcels post, to which all mail-order houses professed indifference before it passed, Sears, Roebuck & Co. increased their business nearly 20 per cent.! Every dollar of the $14,000,000 increase was business lost to some local retailer, in addition to what was lost before.

2.—This one mail-order house alone is now doing almost two million dollars a week. There are two or three others just as large.

3.—The net profits for 1913 were 21.17 per cent. on the common stock, an enormous commercial return for an enterprise that professes to sell as cheap as Sears, Roebuck & Co. It means one of two things, either the concern is misrepresenting the closeness of its prices, or it is buying its merchandise far below any other dealer. Probably both hypotheses are true in part. Some critics bitterly assail the manufacturers who sell supplies to the mail-order houses, claiming that it is the manufacturers who keep the big houses alive, and that they have no right to feed a business which is doing such harm to the regular dealer. No manufacturer or set of manufacturers could kill a concern doing almost a hundred millions a year. They could refuse to sell it, but with such a buying power as that it could produce its own merchandise. No, we are not much of a believer in the theory that the manufacturers could do much, even if they were under obligation to do something.

Isn't This True?

The Chase National Bank of New York has sent this journal, as it has done to a large number of other business houses in this section, a placard bearing the following:—

A PATRIOTIC CREED.

We believe in our country—The United States of America. We believe in her Constitution, her laws, her institutions, and the principles for which she stands. We believe in her future—the past is secure. We believe in her vast resources, her great possibilities—yes, more, her wonderful certainties.

We believe in the American people, their genius, their brain, and their brawn. We believe in their honesty, their integrity and dependability. We believe that nothing can stand in the way of their commercial advancement and prosperity.

We believe that what are termed "times of business depression" are but periods of preparation for greater and more pronounced commercial successes.

And we believe that in our country are being worked out great problems, the solution of which will be for the benefit of all mankind.

To all this the writer, with business men generally, can and does subscribe. We believe in the Government, in its principles and resources, its past, its future; and in the American people, their honesty, their integrity and their desire to reach their highest patriotic possibilities. But what we emphatically do not believe in is the politicians who have always more or less dominated not only the Government but the people. And not alone the Federal Government, either, but all State and municipal Governments. Wherever in all the United States, in fact, you find government organization in any form, you will find these rat-hearted schemers willing to sacrifice everything to their own lust for money or power. Outside of the politicians, there has never been anything serious the matter with us. All the public graft, the thieving and the corruption that have been exposed since we have had a government, has been political graft and thieving and corruption. If we could poison every one of these creatures who prefers himself to the advancement of the public interest, to governmental cleanliness and supremacy, to truth, and dignity and honor—to everything else, in fact—we would never know that this glorious land of liberty was the same place.

Do You Promise Too Much?

Carrying a little further the incident reported editorially last week, in which a railroad traveler was heard describing to another the excellencies of a certain retail dealer in poultry, etc., the chief excellencies being that he kept first-class stuff and was absolutely dependable, another thought occurs to the writer.

What is at the bottom of the average reputation for shiftlessness and unreliability? Nine times out of ten, yes ninety-nine out of one hundred, where a business man has acquired such a reputation that people say of him, "oh you can't depend on him," or "he says he'll have it here by ten o'clock, but you never can tell with that man," the reason is, not that he forgets his promises after he makes them, but that he has promised too much. Customers are insistent. There are other stores. The merchant, fearing to lose them, anxious to conciliate, agrees to do whatever they ask without the slightest expectation that he will be able to fulfill. He does it to gain time, and hopes get away with it, but he seldo does, because he cannot perfo miracles. Obviously the man w agrees to do something within period of time that he has alrea filled to overflowing, is bound disappoint somebody. He figu that he would have disappoint somebody if he had not promised the beginning, but he forgets t the disappointment would then ha been coupled with respect at t fairness of a man who will promise what he may not be a to perform. When he promi and does not perform, there is respect, but only irritation, c tempt and loss of business. T merchant who says: "I can promise to deliver, or whatever may be, by 11 o'clock because doubt my ability to do it," may l an order, but he loses neither rep tation nor his customer's good w

Let this also be said, that the c sumer does not live who would rather be told at the start that w he wants cannot be done, than to promised it, and then not get "Am I sure I can do this?" is t question to ask before promisi anything. Upon the way we ful our promises and representati depends our entire reputation, a reputation means everything.

Two Prices for Different Classes of Customers.

Mr. W. J. C ick, financial s retary of the D troit Retail G cers' Association, says in a rec paper:—

> I would like to see the tim come when all commodities are sol on a basis of two prices, one pric for cash and one price if the good are sold on credit.

It will come. The present sy tem of charging the same price two customers, one of whom co twice as much to sell to as the oth is wholly illogical. Take the m ern department store. There is end to the convenience which t department store affords its c tomers, all of which, however, carefully charged for. A custom can go to a department store eve day in the year and order som thing sent to his house on approv He may reject it in every case, a the store therefore wastes the c of delivering it and going out and getting it back. Again, a charge customer may order what he likes on credit, and may compel the store to carry him for months. Or he may constantly complain of his bills, necessitating long-drawn-out correspondence.

Of course the department store knows it will be called upon to render these services, and it therefore adds an item to cover them, with all other items of "convenience," to its cost of doing business. This item is paid not only by the customer who gets such "convenience" and therefore should pay it, but by the customer who does not—the customer who pays cash and never has anything sent on approval. Why should the latter pay for a service that he never gets? Because he may sometime get it? That is no reason, let him pay for then.

The chance is that a department store—this is a mere random guess—could easily afford to sell 10 or 15 per cent. cheaper to the customer who does not put it to such extraordinary expenses as referred to above, and that it should sell cheaper to that customer is as plain as can be. The cost of such luxuries should be placed where it belongs, on the people who have them. There is no fairness, when a customer has saved a store expense by taking home his own purchases and so on, in still charging him for the cost of that delivery or that expense, whatever it may be.

What applies to the department store applies to every store. Every retail merchant who delivers goods adds the cost of that delivery to the cost of his goods before he gets his selling price. When a customer takes home his purchases, and pays the same price which he would have paid had his goods been delivered, he pays for what he has not gotten, and the fact that he could have gotten it is beside the question. If he chooses not to get it he should be relieved from paying for it.

And in time he will be.

What Profit a Grocer Found When He Analyzed His Orders

Many Articles Netted Less Than the Seventeen Per Cent. It is Supposed to Cost to Do Business. Others Netted More. Usual Range From Slightly Under Seventeen Per Cent. to Twenty-five Per Cent. Selling Three-for-a-quarter a Great Profit Reducer.

In the January 26th number of your paper you quoted National Secretary Green, of the National Retail Grocers' Association, as saying that 50 per cent. or more of the retail grocery trade is done on a basis of no net profit. You ask if this is true, and answer that it is not.

It is considered that the average cost of doing business is 17 per cent.; now if goods that sell for 17 per cent. or less do not pay a net profit, then I shall agree with Mr. Green that 50 per cent. of the goods sold by us grocers do not pay us any net profit. The goods that run up the bills to larger amounts pay the least profit and it is the small things that pay the larger profit. In almost every order a groceryman gets there will be sugar, butter, lard, eggs, crackers at 3 pounds for 25 cents, mincemeat at 3 pounds for 25 cents, and such goods that do not pay the 17 per cent. profit, and these articles will amount to more in dollars and cents than the balance of the order which pay over the 17 per cent.

At the time I read your comment on Mr. Green's statement, there lay on my desk an order for groceries to be filled. I looked it over carefully; it amounted to $2.90. Of that amount $1.24 paid a profit of 18 per cent. or over, while $1.66 paid 17 per cent .or less. The gross profit on the whole bill was a little over 22 per cent. Not content with that I took one of the order books that my man had used the day before and found that the twelve orders amounted to $19.27, and as I copied the items in two separate columns I was sure I had Secretary Green beaten for once. But here is the result: $9.84 paid under the 17 per cent. and $9.43 paid from 17 to 25 per cent. I found that where an order called for a few small articles the per cent. of profit was larger, that is to say that where they ordered one package or can at 10 cents I could put that in the higher per cent. list, but the same goods ordered at 3 for 25 cents had to go in the no net profit list. In the $19.27 worth of goods ordered there were only three packages of the well-known, advertised, no profit-paying goods amounting to 35 cents.

I have been in the grocery business for twenty years and have always tried to sell only goods that paid a profit. One mistake we grocers make is trying to make larger sales. If a customer asks for two cans of tomatoes or two of Jello the salesman (?) will say, "don't you want 3 for 25 cents?" Not stopping to consider that he is losing money on that third article. One of the reasons why the 5 and 10-cent stores make money is because they get the 5 and 10 cents, not 6 for 25 or 3 for 25. I hope some other grocer who does business in some other section will take the trouble to figure out some of his orders and give us the result.

As to Calendars as Advertising Mediums for Retailers.

Lancaster, Pa., Feb. 4, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I thank you kindly for the criticism of my calendar in your Science of Advertising Department, and I agree with your criticism of merchants and business men generally who give calendars and who are seeking to beautify the walls in the home of their customers, but I have never yet been able to understand how the picture of a beautiful woman, animals, birds, scenery or a beautiful landscape was suggesting a merchant's wares to a customer or in any way advertising the merchant. My observation has been that the more expensive the calendar the less real advertising one receives from the same.

The usual thing where pretty calendars are given is that the advertiser's name is cut out or covered over and the beautiful picture is hung up to adorn the walls in the home, and in my judgment there is less chance of getting business from such a thing of beauty than from the printed matter even on the back of a calendar.

Now then, believing and knowing as I do that there is very little advertising value in pretty faces on calendars, I especially designed the calendar which you criticised to see if a calendar can be produced that will get business instead of simply being an expense, and I am sure that it is very gratifying to me to inform you that this particular calendar, crude as it is, has been very popular, and people have telephoned and sent postal cards asking us to be sure to save a calendar for them until they could come and get it.

Now I do not know the amount of business other firms have received from their pretty calendars, but I venture to say that the calendar that you criticised produced more business for me than all the calendars produced for all the firms in Lancaster who gave them out this year. For your information I want to say that the business produced as a direct result of this calendar for the month of January up to this writing amounts to 2½ times the cost of the calendars, and we expect even better results as the months come and go. This calendar has a money and stamp value to a customer, hence the drawing power, and it is producing new business for us every day.

All who have given out fancy calendars this year and can report equal results, please stand up to be counted.

I write this not that I think your criticism was unjust, but to show that in getting up this calendar I had but one end in view, and that was that it produces business, and the results have demonstarted that even a homely looking calendar gotten up to interest the customer is better than an expensive fancy calendar printed as they usually are with are they responsible? If by that you mean have they capital, the answer is that nobody knows. The mercantile agencies will not rate collection agencies, therefore it is not possible to learn whether they have anything behind them or not. It may be said without qualification, however, that as a rule collection agencies have no financial responsibility whatever. This makes trusting moneys or collections to them always a risk.

The writer would not advise any merchant to pay $18 for two years service in this concern. So far as the collection part of the service is concerned, it is not necessary to pay that sum or any other sum whatever in advance to get back bills collected, if they can be collected. In your own town there may be three or four young lawyers, hungry for business, who will be tickled to death to get your accounts to collect for 10 per cent. of what is collected. Or any constable in the office of your local justice of the peace would also. You can rest assured that if these people can not collect, a collection agency in Pittsburg or Chicago can do no better.

As to the rating book of consumers issued by this concern, look at it with reference to your own town and see how complete it is. There have been many complaints about this book.

Two Schemes.

Riverside, N. J., Jan. 31, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Enclosed please find a subscription for stock of the A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. What do you think of the proposition, do you think it safe? These stocks are only issued to retail grocers.

And what information can you give me in regards to the Public Collection Agency? Please return stock subscription, and oblige,

Yours truly,

S. L.

The "Grocery World and General Merchant" has answered many questions about the stock of the Staley Manufacturing Co. as an investment for grocers, and has in every case advised against it. The whole scheme is one to sell the Staley starch, and the company believes that a grocer who owns stock in the company will push the starch to benefit himself, whether it is good starch or not, and whether his customers want it or not. This is bad business. No grocer ought to have any entanglements which will prevent him from making unbiased ¶ It's worth something to feel sure you are selling the very best. You can't always be sure—every manufacturer is apt to feel and to say that his are the best. But as between the manufacturer of a nationally advertised article and the manufacturer of one not nationally advertised, both claiming to have the best, you can be surer that the first one is telling the truth. His advertising absolutely compels him to keep his product at the top notch under penalty of losing all the money he has invested in advertising.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed this week against Weissman & Weinstein, wholesale produce dealers at 153 Attorney street. They made an assignment January 21st. The assets are valued at $2,500.

Summarized Market Conditions.

In the spot coffee market Brazils are dull and heavy. The business is of a hand-to-mouth kind and the sentiment is depressed. The trade is disappointed in the buying by the country. The reaction in options has naturally affected the spot market. Prices are easier, on the basis of 9⅜ cents for Rio 7s and 11⅞ to 12 cents for Santos 4s. Mild grades are in better demand and spot stocks are somewhat limited by delay in receipts, due to low waters in the rivers of the producing sections. Reports from the primary markets indicate that Germany has been an active buyer.

The tea trade is of fair proportions, with firm prices on all grades, except that there is some tendency to shade at first hands. Warehouse stocks are reported as light. Brokers are looking for improvement in trade conditions and expect a satisfactory trade in the spring months.

Refined sugar is dull, as buyers are taking supplies only for immediate requirements. The American and Warner quote 4.10 for standard granulated and the other refiners are 10 points lower.

Distributors are buying rice in a moderate way for needs of the mar-

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. Sweeney, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

The Carrier Basket Idea.—"What's one man's plums is another man's pebbles" can hardly be applied to the carrier basket idea because at this season of the year grocery clerks of the Eastern and Middle Western States are handling a line of vegetables that must necessarily be disposed of in a small way.

These winter vegetables represent turnips, carrots, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, parsnips, beets and the different kinds of onions—red, yellow and white.

We discarded the old-fashioned wooden measure long ago and nearly as long ago we threw the bottomless affairs into the waste barrels. Not because the laws of our State commanded us to take such action, but rather because we found this standard too cumbersome and too slow and particularly too uninviting.

We adopted the pound method and in that way we were enabled to figure out our percentage of profit more accurately, but somehow or other it didn't appeal to them—they still wanted the quart, 2-quart or the half peck quantity.

So up here on the New Jersey Highlands we made a feature of the 2-quart carrier basket, making a display of 50 carriers of various goods and marking them 10, 12 or 15 cents each, and what was the result? The result was an increase of 200 per cent. sales over the pound method.

Why? Because (first) it was a measure principle. (Second) because the baskets looked inviting. (Third) because she could see what she was getting for her money.

Parsnips that used to wither in the "pound" heap were sold almost as fast as they were filled. Same with the other things. Sweet potatoes went like wild fire at 10 cents and turnips that turned sick because two pounds for a nickel didn't turn the trick were sold right and left by the carrier basket.

Very likely some of you will say: "That's all very well for your locality." But our locality, sir, wasn't a carrier locality. We created it so. We felt the pulse of the purse owners and diagnosed our own weakness as well as our own possibilities from that diagnosis.

* * *

Straight Talks are written for mutual help. We don't get our subjects "out of books." We don't write dream talk sitting back in an easy chair puffing a nice cigar. We give you what is cold, stern, business facts. Any of you can say what should be done. We write what is done.

You Need Quaker Oats Now In the New 25-Cent Size

In March We Send Out 26,000,000 Advertisements Featuring This Larger Size

100 Magazines Will Be Working for Your Store

We have long put up Quaker Oats in a 25-cent size. But we sold it only in restricted territory.

This larger size, where we sold it, became immensely popular. So we have now decided to offer it everywhere, and feature it in our advertisements.

We Begin in March

In March we begin a new advertising campaign. We shall use Magazines and Weeklies with a combined circulation of 26,000,000 copies per issue. That is enough to cover every home in the country nearly one and one-half times over. It means at least 100 advertisements read by your customers.

In all these advertisements, month after month, we shall feature the 25-cent size. We shall not merely announce it, but urge people to buy it.

We still advertise and push—more than ever before—the popular 10-cent. size. But the larger size offers ten per cent. more oats for the money, and experience shows that it will be in wide demand.

Best for Us All

It is best for all concerned to feature the 25-cent size. It is best for consumers because they get more for their money. And it saves running out—saves buying so often.

It is best for grocers because it means larger consumption. It makes more profit and less trouble.

An Air-Tight Package Guaranteed Bug-Proof

This package is hand-wrapped. It is sealed air-tight. We guarantee it proof against insect life. Keep your stock in a clean, dry place and this package can't go wrong.

We are the only people who hand-wrap this large-size oatmeal package.

Sales Will Be Lost Unless You Order at Once

Every customer of yours will shortly know of this 25-cent size. A large percentage will want it. They will come to you for it and expect you to have it.

Orders for this larger size should be placed with your jobber at once. Most grocers at present don't carry this size, so our mills for a while will be greatly over-taxed.

The demand for this size will begin in March, and every store will share it. Don't be without it when your customers call. Order a case to-day.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

There is no change in the tea market for the week. Stocks are comparatively light, and nobody has much tea on hand, so that the natural result is a moderate, steady, every day business. Prices are unchanged for the week, and the entire line is steady.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee is still in a rather unsettled condition. The demand is light, and market conditions, from the holder's standpoint, are rather unsatisfactory. Probably Brazil coffees can be bought a shade lower than a week ago. Milds, on the contrary, are very firm and show an advancing tendency, though there is probably no actual advance to quote for the week. Scarcity on spot is the reason, and if the market is supported, the present firmness will last anyway until new crop milds are available, which will be in a month or two. Java and Mocha are unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market is rather unsettled. Raws show a slight advance for the week, but refined is where it was a week ago, nominally 4.10 for granulated, but stock can be bought at 4.05, and possibly even at 4 cents. The demand for refined sugar is only fair; many appear to think that competition will force the refiners to reduce sugar prices in March, after the tariff drops.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is seasonably active at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup quiet at ruling figures. Molasses moderately wanted and unchanged.

Fish.

Mackerel are still steady to firm because of scarcity, with an advance waiting, so holders think, if any demand springs up. The present demand is quite light. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and fairly active; market steady to firm. Domestic sardines show even a further advance by reason of scarcity, and holders are now asking $3.35 for quarter oils in a large way f. o. b. factory. The demand is light. Imported sardines are unchanged. Some brands of Norwegian sardines, so far as first hands are concerned, are almost out of the market.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged and fairly steady on the basis of 70 cents for Maryland 3s in a large way f. o. b. Future tomatoes are not wanted. Spot corn is unchanged in price and in fair demand. Future corn is not figuring much as yet. Some packers have named a price of 97½ cents in a large way on future Maine corn, which is 7½ cents above a year ago. Peas are moderately active, the demand for fancy peas having to go largely unsatisfied, as the supply is very low. Apples are unchanged and quiet. California canned goods selling in the usual seasonable way, at unchanged prices. Small Eastern canned goods unchanged and dull.

Dried Fruits.

Dried fruits are all dull. Prunes show no change in price and moderate demand. Peaches and apricots quiet and unchanged. Raisins are still sluggish at prices that show no change. Currants and other dried fruits dull.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans unchanged and in fair request. Marrows unchanged from last week; demand fair. California limas are tending upward, in some holders' hands, but stock can still be bought below the top price. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for butter has been very light, and the receipts are about normal for the season. The market is steady and unchanged, and the quality of butter arriving is fully up to the season's standard. Stocks in storage are reported large and the market is more or less unsettled, though without prospects of any marked change.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs have increased during the week and the market is from 6 to 8 cents lower, with the quality of the receipts very fancy. As yet the consumptive demand has not increased, because the drop has not yet reached the consumer. It is still a speculative market, owing to the uncertainty as to the weather for the next two months.

Cheese.

The cheese market is reported very light, and the market is firm on the present basis of quotations. The consumptive demand is about normal for the season, and no relief from present high prices can be looked for before spring.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are steady and unchanged, with a moderate demand. Pure and compound lard are firm and unchanged. Compound lard is in fair demand. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats all unchanged and dull.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Our reports from Holland are to the effect that herring have been advancing right along since our last report. The demand has been big from all over the world, and stocks are being absorbed rapidly, so there is very little chance for a decline in the prices, just now when we are nearing the Lenten season. This year has been quite satisfactory on Holland herring, although prices have not shown any advance yet.

The deamnd for Scotch herring continues quite good and also for Norway herring, so the herring trade has really no reason to complain.

Unfortunately, we have no better news in regard to the sardine situation. Norway continues to report total failure of catch. No fish, that is hardly any, are to be had, and we shall have to wait until the summer before we shall be able to get real supplies of fish. We hope it will be good then. In France, of course, there is no fishing of sardines, but the fishing of sprats is reported to be had. In Belgium the fishing of sprats is only very fair, and supplies are coming in very sparingly. The demand continues very good because, owing to the scarcity of Norway sardines, the trade has taken to sprats.

Mackerel has been somewhat neglected during the last month or so, but interest seems to have been awakened, as we notice quite a good many inquiries. If demand should continue to improve, it will be only a very short time before present stocks of mackerel will be all cleared.

STROHMEYER & ARPE CO.

Spices.

The market is fairly active, wi large demand for both black a white peppers, Cayennes and ma articles in the line of seeds a herbs.

Pepper steady and in unusual d mand. Spot supplies have furth decreased. On account of the sh spot stocks and the fact that the is little in sight, indications wou point to higher prices.

Red Peppers.—Spot supplies a unusually small. In fact the sho est in years. Prices have sharp advanced throughout the list. It reported the Japanese crop is a to failure.

Cloves.—Spot prices stea Europe is slightly lower, but high prices are probable from Zanzib Pimento (Allspice) fairly stea with somewhat firmer tone. Pr ent low prices, however, are safe.

Mace in better demand at ve steady prices; the tendency appe upward.

Nutmegs in only fair dema Supplies here have been greatly duced. Higher prices are likely all grades.

Gingers are reported firmer a in better demand, though th have been few changes during last month.

Tapiocas firmer and in unusua good demand.

Paprikas.—The market is m active and prices are likely to higher in sympathy with hig prices now prevailing on red p pers.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—There been a sharp advance in the price celery seed. In fact some hold are asking 30 cents and predictin 40-cent market. Anise is a higher. Canary and cumn firmer. Other seeds and herbs changed and in fair demand.

ket. The movement embraces both domestic and foreign grades, the high prices of the former aiding the demand for the imported rice. Much of the offerings here from the South are of poor quality and so not salable. Brokers expect that the market will become more lively, according as the present supplies are depleted.

Spices are moving well, the sales covering the general list. Peppers are selling especially strong, the grinders taking available supplies for current needs. As a rule spot supplies of spices are moderate and local buyers are giving some attention to lots to be had in nearby markets.

Grocery grades of molasses are being withdrawn in fair volume on contracts but distributors are not making many new contracts as they are fairly well covered. In general, the trade is quiet.

There is little doing in canned goods in the wholesale market this week as the trade is giving most of its attention to the canners' convention in Baltimore. A number of leading factors have named a price basis for the 1914 crop of Maine corn. This price is 97½ cents at Portland, f. o. b. This is 5 cents above the initial quotation of a year ago. Buyers are cautious and little business in futures has yet been placed. It is said that the packers intend not to make any concession this year from quoted prices for cash terms, but buyers look with doubt on this report. Spot corn of standard quality, State and Western, is not abundant and prices are firm. Fancy corn seems to be scarce. Tomatoes are selling here only in a hand-to-mouth way but reports indicate improvement in the demand in other parts of the country. The usual quotations have been about 70 cents for No. 3s and 50 cents for No. 2s, but there have been some sales of stock in worn cans and torn labels slightly below these figures. In spot peas there has been a moderate demand, chiefly for the lower grades. String beans are firm because of the scarcity of spot stocks. Packers are not willing to make concessions on futures.

Canned fruits of all kinds are quiet but steady in price, as offerings are generally light. Any concessions are on stock in damaged cans and worn labels.

In dried fruits there is special activity in Northwestern Italian prunes as the result of the cut made by large factors in spot supplies. It is expected that supplies in the 40-50 sizes will soon be cleared up at the present rate of consumption. There is no pressure to sell 30s as the supplies are light and so there is little doing in this size. In 50s also prices are held up to former quotations as supplies are not plentiful. In California prunes there is a slow movement in a jobbing way and as stocks are only moderate, for both spot and forward delivery, prices are maintained. There is little doing in dried peaches, either spot or forward, and quotations are nominal. There is little demand for dried apricots but prices are firm in view of the moderate stocks here and at the coast. Raisins are dull with prices nominal. Currants are steady but with little life in the market. Dates are selling only in a small way at the lower prices now offered on bulk goods.

Flour is somewhat weaker than it was a week ago. Some of the mills are inclined to give concessions in prices to make sales, while others still hold to the higher prices. Most of the sales of spring wheat patents in jute have been at

This bunch of Coffee was purchased in the primary markets at the time of the year when the best Coffee out of the crop was obtainable, which is a more important factor than the question of price, as long ago we realized that neither we nor the retailer could have lasting success in Coffee selling, without quality, and in

esident of National Canners' Asso-ciation Reports That Penitentaries and Asylums Are Going Into Canning Business in Order to Give Inmates Occupation. Summary of Canners, Brokers and Machinery Conventions.

ecial Correspondence of "Grocery World and General Merchant."

Baltimore, Md., Feb. 6, 1914.

The seventh annual convention of e National Canners' Association, e National Canned Goods Brok-s' Association, and the Machinery d Supplies Association was held re on Tuesday and Wednesday of is week.

The convention opened on Tues-y morning and after the usual eliminaries were gone through esident Bert M. Fernald, of the ational Canners' Association, ade his annual report. He re-rred to the establishment of an ice and laboratory in Washington d stated that the past year had en the most successful of any in e increase of the association's mbership. He also stated that ere was a movement on foot to en the membership of the Na-nal Canners' Association to man-acturers of other food products. Secretary Gorrell also rendered a port. The secretary believed that ned goods made a greater ad-nce in public appreciation during 13 than ever before and cited a mber of consumers' organiza-ns had asked him for official in-rmation about canned goods dur-g the year. He called attention to e fact that the penitentiary of one ate had gone into commercial nning and that he was also ad-sed that certain insane asylums d done the same thing. His point s that such action should be op-sed by the association in every ssible way.

The National Brokers' Associa-n also convened on the same day. e following made addresses: chard Dallam, J. H. Kline, J. A. e, C. S. Jones, Harry Silver and illiam Silver.

The address of welcome to the okers' Association was made by omas J. Meehan, of Baltimore.

At the same time the Machinery l Supplies' Association was hold-; its convention. President U. C. ngbridge said in his annual re-t that only a little more than ten rs ago its membership was only ozen or fifteen firms and that to-y it had 130 members, represent-ing a capitalization of $150,000,000. The president also called attention to the enormous increase in the output of canned goods in the last twenty years and contended that this was made possible only by the improvements in canning machinery.

On Wednesday Willard G. Rouse addressed the Brokers' convention and strongly urged the exercise of more backbone on the part of canned goods brokers in compelling their principals to more carefully live up to their contracts.

Before the National Canners' Association on Wednesday, Oscar B. McGlasson, president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, spoke, covering familiar ground as to the need of canners and jobbers working in harmony. Mr. McGlasson contended that the canners are not equipped either in office or in sales force to sell their goods in small quantities to the small grocer, and that the wholesale grocer furnishes the logical medium of distribution.

Mr. John A. Green, of the National Retail Grocers' Association, also spoke on Wednesday on "The Necessity for the Retailer's Confidence." Mr. Green's theme was the enormous value of the retailer's services in accomplishing the result desired by the National Canners' Association, namely, increasing the demand for canned products. Mr. Green asked how the retailer's co-operation could be obtained, and answered his own question thus: "First, the retailer must be assured a fair remuneration for the labor and capital employed in distribution over and above operating expense. Second, a class of goods must be created that will cause the least complaint from the customer. The consumer must be satisfied as to getting value received in every purchase."

Other addresses delivered to the Brokers' Association during the day were as follows: "The Broker From the Jobber's Point of View," by Walter B. Timms, of Austin, Nichols Co., New York City; "The Broker From the Packer's Point of View," by S. L. Haserot, of Cleveland, Ohio; "The Distribution of Canned Goods," by C. J. Barton, of Boston, Mass.; "Some Legal Aspects of the Brokerage Business," by S. A. Williams, Counsel for the National Canners' Association; John A. Lee, of Chicago, spoke of the canners on "Links in the Chain of Distribution," and other speakers during the day were J. Harry Covington, member of Congress, and Dr. J. H. Wheeler, of the American Agricultural Chemical Co., of Boston, Mass.

The following officers of the National Canners' Association were elected on Wednesday:—

President, William C. Leitsch, of Wisconsin.

First vice-president, George M. Numsen, of Maryland.

Secretary-treasurer, F. E. Gorrell, of Maryland.

Vice-presidents, F. W. Douthitt, South Dakota; E. S. Thorne, New York; J. F. Rourk, Nebraska; Floyd Mattice, Indiana; S. G. Chamberlain, Missouri; Charles Latchem, Indiana; J. L. Moomaw, Virginia; J. E. Guenther, Kentucky; M. W. Jones, Iowa; G. B. Chatham, Wisconsin; George E. Lichty, Iowa; E. L. Grier, California; T. A. Seufent, of Oregon (in place of G. M. George, deceased).

The conventions closed on Thursday with three important addresses by Dr. Carl Alsberg, Chief United States Chemist; Secretary of Commerce Redfield; Congressman J. Harry Covington, a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Dr. Alsberg spoke principally upon the advantage which the Food and Drugs Act has brought to the honest producer, ignoring for a time its advantages to the consumer. He took the position that the law put an end to fakers and thus rid the honest manufacturers of their unscrupulous competition.

Secretary Redfield's address was on "How to Get and Keep Export Trade," and chiefly discussed the points which the would-be exporter of American canned goods should keep in mind in packing goods for

The Busy Grocery

THE busy grocery is the store where the most careful buying is back of intelligent selling. Having what the customer wants, when she wants it, is the very essence of good merchandising.

National advertising is directing consumers to trade marked goods, because the trade mark identifies worthy products and is an implied guarantee.

Keeping a full variety of National Biscuit Company products, in the famous In-er-seal Trade Mark packages and in the handsome glass front cans, means intelligent buying. Meeting the demand created by National Biscuit Company advertising means intelligent selling.

the foreign markets. Uniform quality was one of the principal points.

Congressman Covington's address was a general talk on "Business Legislation." He favored the printing of the manufacturer's name upon the label, but opposed any bill to require canned goods to be dated with the year of packing.

The Brokers' convention elected the following officers:—

Richard Dallam, Belair, Md., president; W. H. Nichols, Chicago, first vice-president; Chas. A. Carey, Philadelphia, second vice-president; Rufus Draper, Duluth, third vice-president; James M. Hobbs, Chicago, secretary; Henry Colbert, Chicago, treasurer; directors, James I. Munoz, Jacksonville, Fla., and John McDaniel, Easton, Md.

The following resolutions were adopted:—

PURE FOOD.

Whereas, Foods placed in hermetically sealed cans do not deteriorate by age, and in some cases improve, as is clearly shown by the reports of the experts employed by the Government and the National Canners' Association; and

Whereas, The effort on the part of some Congressmen, we believe without a thorough knowledge of conditions, to put the date of packing on such canned foods will be a great hardship to the consumer as well as to the manufacturer; therefore be it

Resolved, That this association is emphatically opposed to such legislation, and that our membership use every effort in their power to defeat such legislation wherever proposed.

SANITATION.

Whereas, Cleanliness is one of the first considerations in the preparing of food products; and this subject has been much discussed in the public prints; and an impression of lack of cleanliness exists and is one of the chief drawbacks to the increased consumption of canned and dried foods; therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the imperative duty of every member of this association to take up this question of sanitary methods with his principal and to point out from time to time, should occasion arise, wherein improvements along this line can be inaugurated, that will stimulate consumption and add strength to the industry in the eyes of the public.

CO-OPERATION.

Whereas, The broker is the natural connecting link between the manufacturer and the natural distributor, the wholesale grocer, and is the recognized representative of both, be it

Resolved, That this body as an association and the individual members thereof, maintain this position in all their dealings and lend every effort as such intermediary to further the interests of the National Canners' Association and the National Wholesale Grocers' Association.

A particularly annoying error occurred in this department last week. I discussed an advertisement of McKenna Bros., Kane, Pa., and started out to publish a cut of it as an illustration, but in some way another cut got into the department in its place. This last cut had no connection with what I had written about McKenna Bros. and of course the absence of the McKenna cut left what I had written largely inexplicable. The cut which was reproduced was from "The Market Basket," Erie, Pa., and was intended for another purpose. The McKenna cut which should have been published is as follows:—

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I have been in the grocery business for twenty-nine years and I have sold out to my son, Lewis R. Owen, and son-in-law, L. H. John, and they will continue the business under the firm name of L. H. John Co. They take possession on March 1, 1914. I want to take a little rest for the benefit of my health.

Now, I wish to thank my trade for the favors and patronage they have given me. Some of them have traded with me since the first day I started in business, so I would like if you would do me the favor of writing me a small letter of thanks to them that I may show my appreciation.

I would like to get it as soon as you can make it convenient, so that I can send them out, if you see your way to do it.

Thanking you in advance for your kindness, Yours truly,

J. W. OWEN.

I suggest this:—

Many Thanks and Good-Bye

I have been in the grocery business here for twenty-nine years. Some of you have traded with me from the first day I started.

My health isn't what it ought to be, and I have reached the point where I must take a rest. I have therefore sold the business to my son, Lewis R. Owen, and my son-in-law, L. H. John, who will conduct it under the name of the L. H. John Co. They are both good boys and I am sure will do as honest, fair and friendly a business as I have tried to do. I hope you can see you way clear to keeping on with them.

For myself, I thank you very earnestly for the business you have given me during these twenty-nine years, and so far as business is concerned, bid you goodby.

JOHN W. OWEN.

The L. A. Leathers Co., department storekeepers of Brookville, Pa., send in a clipping of a 9-inch single column newspaper advertisement which I judge they recently used in their local paper. I reproduce it slightly reduced.

This advertisement is not displayed very well, but nevertheless I consider it good, and think it should have gotten some results. A part of it may have been too general. For instance the advertisement of blankets. An effort was made to cover the whole blanket stock of quoting cotton blankets at various prices, and woolen blankets the same way. I should have picked out one grade—"an unusual blanket for 75 cents"—and talked about that. Even if the reader of such an advertisement wouldn't buy a 75-cent blanket he would be interested—if he is in the market for any blanket. There is great force in discussing one thing and referring to other grades of it in this way: "other grades, equally good value, at ———."

CCXLV.—The Two Proposed New Laws Against Business and Price Combinations.

The business classes everywhere should and will be interested in the bills which President Wilson has had introduced in Congress, and which will almost certainly pass, defining and restricting all manner of combinations to restrain competition, fix prices, etc. It is understood that as soon as Congress enacts these bills into laws, several of the States will immediately enact them into statutes of their own.

Several bills have been introduced, but the classes of business men who read these articles are directly interested in but two, both of which are offered as amendments to the Sherman anti-trust law of 1890. The Sherman law is the act under which all of the Government's suits against price-fixing combinations have been brought It has been criticised because it is too vague, and also because its force has been greatly weakened by the United States Supreme Court's recent decision that it prohibits only "unreasonable" restraints of trade.

The more important of the two bills provides that the expressions "every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce," and the word "monopolize," all contained in the original Sherman act, shall mean any combination between corporations, firms or persons, to do any of the following things:—

> First.—To create or carry out restrictions in trade or to acquire a monopoly in any interstate trade. business or commerce.
> Second.—To limit or reduce the production or increase the price of merchandise or of any commodity.
> Third.—To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transporting, selling or purchasing of merchandise, product or any commodity.
> Fourth.—To make any agreement, enter into any arrangement, or arrive at any understanding by which they, directly or indirectly, undertake to prevent a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or among any purchasers or consumers in the sale, production or transportation of any product, article or commodity.
> Sec. 2. That any such contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce, or monopoly, is hereby declared to be unlawful.

This is regarded as pretty sweeping, but its exact meaning will of course not be determined until it comes before some court. The fourth paragraph is the one under which many business arrangements now upheld or permitted by the law would doubtless be prosecuted. "To make any agreement, enter into any arrangement, or arrive at any understanding by which they (person, firm or corporation) directly or indirectly undertake to prevent a free and unrestricted competition among themselves"—this part of it is not new; the present law prevents that already—E. J. B.—"or among any purchasers or consumers in the sale, production or transportation of any product, article or commodity." That part which is italicized is, in this form, new. If it is to be literally enforced, it will prevent a manufacturer from doing something which all laws now allow him to do, viz., contract with buyers to resell his product at a certain figure. A manufacturer who sells A, B and C, jobbers, contracting with all that they will not resell his product under $1, is certainly making "an agreement by which he directly prevents a free and unrestricted competition among * * * any purchasers in the sale." Heretofore, no law or court has interfered with this practice, and several have upheld it in clear decisions. If the new law aims to put a stop to it, there is still the question whether it can constitutionally interfere in such a way with the right of private contract. Already there have been strong opinions given that it cannot and that the proposed provision is invalid. This much is certain, however, that from now on, whether this law passes or some modification of it, it is going to be harder to scotch the cutter than it has ever been before.

The second of the two bills I have referred to will doubtless lead to confusion and misunderstanding. The text of its two principal sections is as follows:—

> Sec. 9. That it shall be deemed an attempt to monopolize trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations or a part thereof, for any person in interest or foreign commerce to discriminate in price between the different purchasers of commodities in the same or different sections or communities, with the purpose or intent thereby to injure or destroy a competitor either of such purchaser or of the seller.
> Provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of transportation; and provided further, that nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise in interstate or foreign commerce from selecting their own customers, but this provision shall not authorize the owner or operator of any mine engaged in selling its product in interstate or foreign commerce to refuse arbitrarily to sell the same to a responsible person, firm or corporation who applies to purchase.
> Sec. 10. That it shall be deemed an attempt to monopolize trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations or a part thereof, for any person in interstate or foregn commerce to make a sale of goods, wares or merchandise or fix a price charged therefor, or discount from or rebate upon such price, on the condition or understanding that the purchaser thereof shall not deal in the goods, ware or merchandise of a competitor or competitors of the seller.

In a nutshell this prevents a manufacturer from selling his product for 10 cents a pound in one county and for 8 cents in a neighboring county, but only provided he does so in order to "injure or destroy a competitor." This is where the misunderstanding may arise. Probably half of all sellers will make one price to one buyer, and another price to another buyer sibly in the same town. This is business reasons—reasons of cr of desirability, of quantity, or not. This act would not inte with this—it only prohibits it it is done to "injure or destr competitor." For instance, as Standard Oil Co. used to do. ruin an independent competit would send its wagons into his ritory with a price which he not meet and live. A lower p often, than its own oil was se for in the very next town. To vent such practices as that thi is aimed.

Section 10 is also new and important. To-day a large nu of manufacturers—not so now as formerly, however- making special concessions to ers who buy of them exclusi and there is no law to stop t The above act, if it passes, will them, for it declares that any like that will be considered an tempt to monopolize trade or merce."

Question: V. M. Simons, D town, Pa.—Can you give me reference regarding the Empire manufacturers of rain coats, 3 386 Lafayette street, New City. I bought some rain from their salesman, who h coat and he threw it on the floo stamped on it with his feet guaranteed them waterproof. were sent C. O. D. and I sold and had complaints they woul hold water out. We tried with water in a basin and it w through. I wrote to them exp ing same and their reply was they did not guarantee the we their coats. I wrote back at and told them it was not the it was the waterproofness, and received no reply to this date you think is good for some merchants you can publish in next issue.

Answer.—The mercantile r books for New York City Brooklyn show no "Empire manufacturers of high grade coats." Their "factory" addr given as Wallabout street, B lyn, and their show rooms a Lafayette street, New York.

If the raincoats sold by the pire concern do not resist they are naturally not in confo with the guarantee. The guar was really a double one—it first the express guarantee o salesman, and it was second th plied guarantee that would ha with every raincoat whether thing was said about it or not, , that it would resist water. Re- ing water is the sole purpose of aincoat.

ou can sue the Empire concern your money back and any other nages which you have incurred ugh their breach, but the chance t would not pay you to do it. not know the amount of money take here, but unless it is sub- tial you would find it more ier than it was worth.

he biggest fakes of the present are being perpetrated with rain- s. I do not understand why let the Empire concern send these coats C. O. D., as they in their letter to you of October : "With reference to terms you have the option either 30 days or 2 per cent. 10." The letter relessly written with a pen and iterate.

am afraid you will get but little faction here.

Some Big Thoughts on Premiums.

I was sitting in a hotel with a fellow the other night when we got to talking about premiums. He opened up a new box of cigarettes. I don't know what kind they were—they all look alike to me. Call 'em by any name and they'll smell as bum.

He pulled out of the box something that looked like a little rug.

"Gee!" he said, "get on to this."

"What 'tis?"

"This is the free dope you get with these smokes," he said. "Premiums."

"Does it make the cigarettes any more respectable?" I said.

"Not so's you can notice it," he said. He's a slangy pup. I hate slang; taint gemumly.

"What's the use of it, then?" I asked him.

"You can search me. What's the use of any premium? Simply to give people more for their money, that's all."

"But does it give 'em any more?"

"Sure, these cigarettes would be a dime whether this rug came with 'em or not. Therefore I get the rug for nothing, don't I?"

"Mebbe," I said, "but what good is it?"

"Ain't any to me," he said, "but it might be to somebody."

I don't doubt it would. People collect all sorts of truck—I used to have a grandmother—Lord rest her soul!—that would collect any blame thing at all. Didn't make a mite of difference what it was—"it might come in handy some time."

"It must keep these people that give premiums guessing what to give," he said. "Judging by what they offer you, some of their guesses must be made in their sleep."

"It's always seemed to me some of 'em could use more sense in what they give," I said.

"You've never tried it, have you?" he asked.

"Nope, but I have a hunch I could dope out some things people would take notice of."

"Well, as it happens, I have done it," he said. "I ran a scheme like that about five years ago, and I can tell you it's no cinch to pick out premiums. Looks like it would be, with a million and one things to pick from, but it ain't. You can pick what you like, of course, but is it going to take? You say you have a hunch what to give—what would some of your premiums be?"

"Well, I dunno as I can say offhand, but—well, here, what ails this? What would be the matter with giving a china tooth with every box of rolled oats? Eat enough oats and you get a set—any dentist can make 'em up for you. That ain't ever been done."

"Great!" he said. "Especially to a fellow that has teeth to burn of his own."

"That don't make any difference," I said, coming back as quick—just like that. "He could have an extra set made up and keep 'em in the house to bite his wife's folks with when they come to the house."

"It's new, I'll admit that," he said. (Between you and me, he talked like he was jealous.) "Of course, there's another little thing about it. Teeth aren't all alike, you know. Maybe the scheme might not be appreciated by the old granny that eat oats for four years and then found she had 142 front teeth and no backs."

"That ain't any of my business," I said. I was beginning to get sore. These people that can't think of anything good themselves, but are ready enough to pick somebody else's ideas to pieces—they get my goat.

"I've thought of another thing," I said. "Over at Punxsutawney the other night I had a drink at a s fountain that could make a fort giving as a premium something take the taste out of peop mouths. If they'd hand out so thing like that with every drin might drink it again some t As it is, never again."

"There's something in that," said, "why don't you write to manufacturer? He'd be pleased with the idea. Maybe ask you to his house over Sund Mean again, you see. Pah!

"Here I come again," I s "but before I do, I want to h this to you—I don't care a tink cussword whether you like t ideas or not. They're over head, that's about the size of it

"Here's my third and last thought," I said. "I expect really the best of 'em all. know and I know that all over broad land people are taking Every night a million people ta pill before they go to bed. some of those people have take many pills their knee joints ball-bearing. Now all those have to be paid for, don't t All right, I'd give 'em away as miums with something."

Then I sat back for a minute let it soak in. I saw him crook finger just a trifle—he didn't t I saw him—at the hotel office didn't know what he wanted for.

"And what's more," I said, conceal the premium inside goods. Cake would be a thing! Hurray! I've got Don't you steal this."

He promised me with tears i eyes that he wouldn't, but I know. You never can tell. Th other people living rich off my to-day.

National Wholesale Grocers' Association.

he National Wholesale Grocers' ociation has issued the follow- bulletins to its members:—

UNIFORM WALNUT CONTRACTS.

The object of this letter is to tain your individual opinion as to present walnut contract. Your mmittee is conferring with the alnut Association, and desires to ve the benefit of your views. Please do not wait for someone e to answer this letter. We hope t each and every wholesale gro- will take the time to consider ll, and to answer all of the fol- ing questions, so that your com- tee may be guided by what you nk is right:—

. Is the present walnut contract isfactory?

. In your opinion, what para- phs should be eliminated?

. What paragraphs or provisions the protection of the wholesale cer should be added?

. Are you in favor of placing lers subject to approval of price?

. Are you willing, as a result of ir experience during the year just t, to accept the Walnut Associa- n's grading as final? Or do you nk that some other arrangement to grading would be more just l practicable?

DISCOUNT FOR CASH.

Your attention has previously n called to the important subject discount for cash.

Various manufacturers have nted the wholesale grocers dis- nts for cash and others may do wise, if the wholesale grocers l respect the provisions of Dis- nt for Cash terms.

The invoice is a contract. The tion of buyer and seller is one contract, and the wholesale gro- who attempts to take a discount cash without paying cash with- the time limit violates a clear iness agreement.

Manufacturers announce the Dis- nts for Cash because they want money more promptly, otherwise would be unbusinesslike to grant m. They are a banking prop- tion and are made or allowed on dition that payment be made hin a given time.

A wholesale grocer who accepts invoice subject to Discount for sh terms and then remits to the nufacturer several days after the scount for Cash terms have sed, and expects the manufac- er to accept the remittance with- protest, is not only unfair and lty of unbusinesslike methods, is subject to as severe criticism a manufacturer would be who ivered short weight or count or erior goods.

The officers and committees of s association have been untiring their efforts to serve your best erests and have accomplished re- ts of direct benefit to you, in the e of which facts, our attention called to some wholesale grocers o continue to abuse the Discount Cash privilege, not only by dering a remittance less the Dis- nt for Cash after the time for h allowance has elapsed, but in ne instances have written dis- urteous letters to manufacturers, because the latter would not accept the remittance tendered.

Please remember that when a manufacturer announces a Discount for Cash he does it as a return for promptness.

Unless the wholesale grocer will be honest and sincere and will not take a Discount for Cash except when remitting to the manufacturer within the number of days fixed by such manufacturer, he cannot expect further Discounts for Cash which have proven to be, and are, in the interest of the wholesale grocer as well as of the manufacturer.

It is recommended that your bookkeeping department be instructed relative to these Discount for Cash terms, and when you are not entitled to them, don't expect a manufacturer to grant them.

BETTER CONTAINERS.

In view of the fact that this association has devoted much attention to the question of "better containers," a complete report of which was made at our last annual meeting, we now beg to call your special attention to this important subject.

Transportation companies are making an active campaign with a view to reducing the risks now incurred on account of inferior shipping cases or packages, and it is in your interest to co-operate in a movement which will provide better containers than are now used.

The fibre container is coming in such general use that unless you insist on the manufacturer supplying a container which will stand the wear and tear, the transportation companies may find it necessary to penalize goods shipped in such containers with an increase in the rate on them.

The average canned goods case is not of sufficient strength to carry the contents, much less the rough handling, which it is subjected to in transportation.

Your committee recommends, that before any 1914 canned goods contracts are signed you have rubber stamps made and have each contract properly stamped to insure that strong cases will be furnished.

Condensed Milk Brands Decline.

A reduction in prices of several brands of domestic condensed milk was announced last Monday. It had been expected, but was not as great as had been expected in some quarters, but was still a radical change, amounting to a cut of 20 to 25 cents a case in prices. Importers had looked for a still greater reduction, but from the statements made by the representatives here they were fully prepared to meet it.

BURK'S

Breakfast Relish

This product is usually called "Minced Ham" by the consumer. It consists of choice, tender pieces of pork, chopped to the proper degree of fineness and stuffed in a linen container. It is smoked just long enough to acquire that pleasant and appetizing flavor which only hickory wood can impart. Weight about five pounds each.

After the bag is removed in the same manner as from our Lunch Roll, the Relish is cut in thin slices, and the only additional preparation necessary for serving is to fry it a few minutes over a hot fire.

This makes it one of the quickest, most economical and at the same time one of the most satisfying and nutritious breakfasts obtainable.

If you are not already using Burk's Breakfast Relish—give it a trial. Like all other "Burk" products—it is the best on the market.

BURK'S

Pig Souse

IS A SEASONABLE SPECIALTY

Prepared fresh daily, in pans of five pounds each. The jelly is clear and transparent and free from vegetable gelatines and ill-smelling glue stock.

Contains plenty of meat and garnished with slices of lemon and parsley.

Proves attractive when turned out of the pan, and is a quick seller, saving the consumer the trouble of cooking pigs' feet, so difficult to obtain at this season of the year.

Give it a trial and be convinced.

Two Valentine Trims

No. 1.

The illustrations show two neat and attractive Valentine windows; as a rule there is a party or social function on that night and it will pay to decorate the windows a little. The window of hearts is arranged in the following manner:—first cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. In the center place bright oranges in the shape of a heart and at each side make another of lemons and tangerines, between towards the front, place nuts in small heart shapes. Along the rear place a board slanting, cover it with the white crepe paper. This done get some pasteboard and cut it in long strips about one inch wide, cover with red crepe paper. Bend the strips to form hearts and pin them fast to the slant board, fill the hearts with cranberries. Cut some of the white crepe paper in long strips about three inches wide, twist and arrange at each side, at the rear, as in illustration. Cut out a large heart of pasteboard and cover it with red crepe paper, cut some letters of white glazed paper and paste on. Suspend it in the center.

No. 2.

The valentine display is arranged in the following manner:—cover the bottom of the window with bright red crepe paper, then place the large valentine in the center which is arranged as follows:—it depe on the size of the window as to how large the valentine should be, the size to show up best should be about three feet long and two wide, at least. Nail a strip of pasteboard about one inch wide covered with red crepe paper, to the edge of the valentine, all arou about an inch and a half from the outer one place another in an upri position; pins forced in slanting will hold it. Allow three inches f this, then place two more strips in the same manner, place red pa in the three inch space. This done fill the narrow space between pasteboard strips with cranberries, make the scallop of loaf or dom sugar. Cover a long pasteboard strip with red crepe paper, bend i form a heart and pin it to the center of the board. Cut a little stick the shape of an arrow and bronze it, place the arrow across the he cutting into the pasteboard strip a little to hold it in place. Now the heart with cranberries, cover the large space with loose granula sugar, take care and smooth it well, make the letters with cranber Elevate it about twelve inches at the rear. Along the front p olives, pickles, sauce, etc. At each side display sliced ham and loaf, fancy small cakes, pound cakes and saltines or nabiscos. F the edge of the valentine build a semi-pyramid of canned fruit, differ kinds. Suspend a neat sign card.

Edgar T. Welch Tells Why His Firm Dropped Free Deals and Quantity Prices

How the Plan Adopted Two Months Ago Worked Out. Only Sane Way to Sell. If the Quantity Price Idea is Consistently Applied, it Would Mean a Price for Every Quantity. Larger Part of Goods Handled by Dealers Selling Five to Ten Cases Per Year.

The one-price plan is not a new idea, but, while nearly everybody commends the theory, present expediency is responsible for the prevalence of free deals, quantity prices and discounts to favored ones.

The manufacturer never "gives" a free deal or a discount on quantity. He first makes his list higher in order that he may "give" something later, or, instead of reducing the price to all when conditions warrant, he extends the benefit of a reduction to a few dealers. Of course a manufacturer may be willing to sell goods at cost, or at less than a normal profit when he finds it impossible to sell them at regular prices. Merchants take their chances when buying such goods.

The quantity discounts that applied on Welch's previous to December 1, 1913, were a development. They were not in force originally; when increased output effected savings for us we "gave" discounts on quantity. But we came to realize that it was not the proper foundation on which to build a permanent business, and when the grape crop conditions of last fall required a change in our selling terms, we decided that the one price plan was the fair method—the only fair one—for meeting the situation.

The sale of our goods extends to every section in the country. Our terms are uniform (except in the West, where freight rates are the highest). We depend upon merchants in every city and village to supply the demand and co-operate with us. In order to properly appeal to merchants and consumers, our selling terms can vary but little, if any, because of geographical location. This principle is generally recognized in the marketing of specialties.

If a retailer in Atlanta, Ga., ought to get the same price on our goods as a retailer in Cleveland, Ohio, why should not a retailer at Marietta, Ga., a small town perhaps twenty miles from Atlanta, get the same price as the Atlanta merchant?

Suppose a retailer could secure the lowest price on fifty cases; what should we say to retailers using or willing to use one hundred cases? And there are still larger stores or combinations of stores that can use five hundred, one thousand or more cases. Why should we stop with fifty cases? If the quantity price idea were carried to its logical conclusion, there would have to be a price to fit every quantity.

Our records show that a very large part of the goods sold is handled by dealers using five to ten cases a year, and that the aggregate used by the twenty-five and fifty-case buyer is small in comparison with the quantity purchased by other dealers.

You know that the experience of other manufacturers confirms our experience, that many of the dealers who are looking for quantity and special deals, strenuously object to the restrictions which the manufacturer necessarily places upon the deal—they want the quantity price, but object to the quantity—if it is a time offer, they think the manufacturer has no right to limit the time—if the quantity proposition is offered on condition that the goods be retailed by their own store only, they do not hesitate to buy more than they can use and then divide with the other fellow—in short there are some dealers who will enter into any sort of a contract with the manufacturer, if they think the manufacturer is bound to carry out his part and they are left free to do as they please.

But we believe that the majority of dealers want to buy goods at a fair price, and want to be assured that no one is getting a better price. They would rather buy according to their actual needs. They have had experience in buying quantity lots on the glib salesman's pretty story of the "demand that is going to be created."

Over two months have elapsed since we withdrew all quantity discounts and reduced list prices except in the far West. Naturally, we have met with opposition, but we long ago discovered that we could not please everybody. Results so far have exceeded our expectations and we look to 1914 and the future with assurance. The principle is right.

How a Moderate-sized Retailer Can Use Scientific Efficienc the Store. A California Contributor Tells How He Did What it Accomplished for Him. Main Need is Reduct of Overhead Charges.

The message of efficiency has been carried far and wide in recent years, but there are still many corners where it has not penetrated and more messengers are necessary. The large corporations are taking advantage of the new doctrine with a resultant saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars in waste, extra energy and lost motion. The saving in overhead expense alone is sufficient to warrant the installation of the methods of efficiency.

The smaller business man has as yet given little or no thought to this latest discovery of industrial thinkers. He has not yet received the message. While what I have to add to this important subject deals primarily with grocery store management, my methods can be applied to any business or any allied businesses.

It did not take me very long after I went into the grocery business to realize that my overhead expenses were too heavy. I had taken over an established business which for years had been conducted in a shod way, the former owner b satisfied if the credit side of ledger showed a small profit. gave my new enterprise a great of study and now after eight y I have the following departme

My profits are large becaus have cut down the overhead pense by combining these var departments. I still make the s number of deliveries as I did w I sold groceries only. There been no increase in my telep bill. I have had to add little to clerk hire, and I have the s number of solicitors. My cl are acquainted with the stock i

Here Is a Question That You Can Answer

It is the question that forms the subject for the next monthly contest as to the sale of nationally advertised goods when they do not pay a profit. Here it is:—

4—If it should not be thrown out of stock, how far should selling such unprofitable articles go? In other words, how many such unprofitable articles can a retailer afford to sell and charge the loss to service?

This discussion is going to be very illuminating and interesting. Will you join it? Outside of doing your fellow-merchants good, you may win a neat little prize. The prizes for the best papers are as follows:—

For the Second Best :	5.00
For the Third Best :	2.50

the departments and in a rush can attend to the wants of any of the customers. My solicitors who at first took orders for groceries only now take orders for everything I have in stock and it should be evident to anyone how much more valuable that makes them to me. The analogy can be followed out in my office expense, which has increased but little.

Any business man who will give thought can do what I have done. While I admit that there are many of the fine points of efficiency which I cannot make use of in this business, by applying the broader principles I have made good to my satisfaction. Unnecessary expense must be eliminated in these days of active competition and I have tried to show you how I accomplished it.

It can be plainly seen that in these days when the high cost of living has reached a stage never before known in the history of this country, that a merchant who caters to the needs of the housewife can by consolidating the different lines of business as I have done, keep his operating expenses down to such a low mark that he can afford to sell his merchandise on a much smaller margin of profit. By this means he can reduce the present high cost of living to a great degree, mutually benefiting his customers and himself.

Department of Agriculture Holds that Yellow Baking Powder is Not a Substitute for Eggs.

The Department of Agriculture has recently received letters from a number of persons who desire to place a product on the market under the name "Egg Powder" or "Egg Substitute." These designations would undoubtedly lead the ordinary purchaser to believe the product either to be made from eggs or to have the effect of eggs in baking. In reality, the product is nothing but a baking powder containing a considerable excess of ground rice as a filler and colored yellow with powdered turmeric. The Food and Drugs Act prohibits the sale of food products under false or misleading names, and as it is evident that a product of this kind cannot be regarded in any way as a substitute for eggs in baking, its sale as an egg powder or egg substitute is not sanctioned by the department.

The New York Letter

Annual Banquet American Specialty Manufacturers' Association Brings Out Some Important Trade Facts as to Fixed Prices. Food Trade Conference at Waldorf on February 27th. National Wholesale Grocers' Association Discussing Uniform Food Standards. Market Summary.

New York, Feb. 11, 1914.

A number of important questions were discussed at the sixth annual banquet given Tuesday evening by the New York Association of Manufacturers' Representatives in the Hotel Martinique. The relations of the various factors in the trade to one another was treated in the course of the speech making and special satisfaction was expressed by officers of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association with the results of its work along various lines. One of the addresses which awakened the most attention was in relation to the right of the specialty manufacturers to fix the retail selling price of his product.

The toastmaster was President A. R. Rodway. He said that the representatives of eighty of the leading manufacturers of food products in the United States are now members of the Association of Manufacturers' Representatives in New York. He said that the monthly meetings are proving most helpful in bringing about increased co-operation and good will among members of the wholesale and retail trade and in eliminating various abuses that formerly interfered with the proper and satisfactory distribution of food products.

Mr. Rodway dwelt on the success of the plan of guaranteeing the orders of the specialty salesmen so that jobbers now fill them promptly and retailers accept the shipments. He said that as a result of this system the faker has been practically eliminated from the ranks of specialty salesmen. Fully 95 per cent. of the orders now turned into the hands of jobbers by members of the association are bona fide. The members represent firms whose combined capital is close to $400,000,000.

The speaker said that the members of the association are turning over to the jobbers in this territory annually orders to the amount of $20,000,000, upon which the jobbers realize a profit of approximately $3,000,000. Some jobbers have installed special departments to look after these specialty orders and such departments have proved useful and profitable.

An excellent analysis of the question of fixed prices was presented by S. L. Stix. He argued that fixed prices keep competition where it ought to exist, while unrestricted competition tends to the growth of monopolies, with inferior service to the public and, eventually, higher prices.

The analysis considered the subject from the point of view of the manufacturer, the jobber and the retailer, with the public interests as paramount. In part, Mr. Stix said:—

> The subject of restricting the resale price of trade-marked goods is very much to the front at the present time. Secretary of Commerce Redfield, in his annual report, said as follows: "Some men, well informed, argue that the fixing of retail prices under conditions where competition of manufacture exists tends to promote competition. Others say that the refusal to permit fixing of retail prices tends to monopoly, because, in the cut-throat competition certain to follow, obviously the stronger competitor will survive and may eventually have the business in his own hands." Such a statement from a cabinet officer is significant and indicates the trend of modern thought.
> In the grocery trade, under the fixed resale price, the manufacturer protects the distributor with a fair profit. He gives a larger than a fair profit at his peril. Competition between his own product and between the product of other manufacturers can be depended upon to regulate that. Why should he be made to compete against himself? At the same time, fixed resale prices enable the manufacturer to do specialty work advantageously, which is generally considered the most efficient and most economical method of introducing trade-marked goods. With trade-marked goods sold on a competitive basis the jobber's profit is wiped out and the manufacturer is encouraged to do business direct with retailers to maintain control of his sales plan. This direct dealing is more expensive to the manufacturer, and in the end the consumer pays the bill.
> As to the jobber, the fixed resale price results in the growth of the number of jobbers, which encourages competition in a broad sense, even if it restricts competition on trade-marked goods. With fixed prices removed, the small jobbers are kept small and poor and there is no encouragement for new jobbers to start. This again tends toward monopoly, and the consumer pays the bill.
> The same conditions apply to the retail trade. Under fixed prices the retailer is necessarily only given a fair profit on trade-marked goods. Small merchants are encouraged and this, I think, is good for the body politic. With fixed prices on trade-marked goods the right kind of competition is encouraged, namely competition of real service. With fixed prices removed, instead of competition of service, we have competition of cunning. People are humbugged by cut prices on goods of known value, and the small independent dealer, who is often the most efficient and economical distributor, is eliminated. So in the retail trade, as well as the wholesale trade, unrestricted competition on trade-marked goods leads to unfair trade methods, tends to monopoly, and the consumer pays the bill.
> If I have analyzed the situation correctly, the public interests are best served by permitting the independent manufacturer of trade-marked goods to name the resale price on his own product, and I think both the trade and the consumer are beginning to realize this and that we, therefore, can reasonably expect relief in the near future.

Louis Runkel and J. E. Linihan spoke as officers of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association. Mr. Runkel urged the importance of watching legislation in view of the multitude of bills that are being offered at every legislative session all over the country affecting the food business. He said that there is a crisis in which all should stand together in exposing the character of fallacious and ruinous legislation when it is proposed.

Mr. Linihan spoke in favor of getting legislation which would enable manufacturers to protect prices on trade-marked products. He emphasized the point that unrestricted competition leads to monopolies. He said that associations similar to those represented at this banquet are making progress in all parts of the country and much benefit will result from their united efforts along desirable lines.

The speakers included F. Tucker, Boston, the vice-president of the New England Association of Manufacturers' Representatives; George Rowland, Philadelphia, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Philadelphia Association; S. W. Ro[illegible], Chicago; Philip C. Staib, who spoke on the attitude of the jobbers toward the manufacturer, and O. B. McGlasson, president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association.

ıe second annual National l Trades Conference has been d for Friday, February 27th, ıe Waldorf-Astoria. The gen- purpose is to advance the e of uniform food laws in the ous States, based on the Fed- law. A conference of this was held last year in Atlan- City.

Practical Ideas to Help Retail Stores.

The careful retailer who searches through his trade paper every week with a view to finding something that he can apply to the practical needs of his own business, will never be disappointed, and this is true whether the paper is the "Grocery World and General Merchant" or some other one that tries to be as helpful as it can be to its subscribers.

For example, take the following brief item from the last issue of this journal:—

UNITED STATES AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT BOOSTING CORN MEAL.

The Department of Agriculture's experts in nutrition have been studying the possible uses of corn meal, which they have figured out makes up over 8 per cent. of the total food consumed by the people of the United States. In a farmer's bulletin (No. 565) entitled "Corn Meal as a Food and Ways of Using It," several dozen recipes are given that may call to mind old favorites and suggest to the housewife untried dishes both appetizing and nutritious. Some of these recipes date back to the aborigines of the soil. Retail grocers everywhere could make good use of this bulletin in pushing their own sales.

The use to which this could be put is hinted at in the last sentence. A plan of stirring up a little something suggests itself readily. Let the grocer send to Washington for a number of copies of this bulletin. Let him paste a copy on the front of his window and flank it with a window display of corn meal, and a placard making some short and snappy reference to what can be done with it. Let him have some short circulars printed, exploiting corn meal and referring in them to the many new recipes for it that can be obtained at his store. Let him even advertise it in his local papers.

What would be accomplished if he did all this? First, he would undoubtedly sell more corn meal, which since it pays a profit, would be well worth selling. But he would do more—he would help to get his store into the public eye as a place where something is doing all the time—where there are things new and fresh—a live, up-to-date place. That people naturally and inevitably gravitate toward such stores, and away from the quiet, sober place that runs dully in a groove—no matter how good the latter's service is—is as certain as that flowers bend their heads toward the sun. A merchant who can get for his store the reputation of always having something new, or novel or fresh, has his fortune made, if he has the ability to follow it up.

Country Editors Working Together With Country Merchants.

A letter from the Home Town Association of America appears in another column. This association has a good campaign on. It proposes to develop the country town, so that people will neither want to go away from it, nor to buy away from it. Its method of doing this is to persuade the country editor to work with the local merchants. He must teach them to advertise, so they can use in their defense the weapon which larger concerns who would steal their business are using against them. He must help them to develop as merchants for their own good and the good of their town. The theory is sound. Nobody is closer to the pulse of a country town than the man who edits a country paper there. He knows what is going on, and he ought to know it before it happens. He also knows, or ought to know, what is going on outside the town. Altogether the right kind of a country editor can be of enormous help to the merchants of the town in very many ways.

The reason many country editors are not so helpful to the local merchants is that they are not the right sort of men. Very often they are shiftless spongers, suffering from chronic financial embarrassment—men, in short, who do not inspire respect. This often happens because the local merchants do not give them proper support. The weaknesses of each are often caused by the others. Many local papers are worthless advertising mediums because they haven't the money to wake up on, and the money to wake up on is denied them by the local merchants—from whom it might otherwise come—because they are worthless, and so there is an endless chain, leading nowhere. No merchant or association of merchants can make a better investment than by supporting a local paper, and helping it to become great, for a country paper cannot become great without making its town and its business men great also.

Only One Good Time in a Year.

One of the easiest things in the world is falling into a groove. Staying in is even easier. If achieving ambition were only half as easy, the world would see millions more successes than it sees now. Nothing is so destructive to success as living in a rut.

The Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association is one of the most progressive organizations of its class in the country, and by the same token its members ought to be and are among the most progressive merchants. Yet among the several hundred grocers who attended the association's twenty-eighth annual banquet last week, there were some who from one year's end to another, attend no other social function but the banquet of their organization. This would be remarkable in the heart of the rural districts. In a city where there is so much to divert, it is amazing.

Why does an active business man content himself with one social function a year? Surely not because there are no other social functions to go to. There are dozens; in Philadelphia one may find any kind of diversion and pleasure he wants. In fact he can find them anywhere. The reason a man does not go after them is because of physical and mental lethargy. He rises early and works all day. In the evening he is tired, and staying home seems pleasanter than going out. So he sits at home and dozes, and dozes, and finally goes to bed. While all the lectures, the music, the drama, the association with friends, which would have kept him youthful and enlivened his mind and his body, pass by unnoticed and unused.

Of two men with equal abilities, one following the above course and the other going about regularly and intelligently, the second will h twice the business man that the fir is. He will be more alert, and h will know more. He will also ge real enjoyment out of life.

Food Law Now Applied to Restaurant Coffee.

The "Grocery World and Ger eral Merchant" is glad to note tha several Philade phia restaura keepers got thei during the week For years they have been servin adulterated coffee—evading foo laws which grocers had to obey un der penalty of arrest, and the reaso they thought they were safe i doing this is that until recentl there was no chemical analysi which would reveal chicory i coffee after it was made into liquid. Many people have thrive on this weakness in chemical sci ence. Various manufacturers sol several kinds of coffee fillers, some times made of chicory, sometime not. All were fakes, but nc usually upon the restaurant mer They generally knew what the were getting—it was the consume who paid for coffee and did nc get it.

Dr. Charles H. Lawall, Pennsyl vania State chemist, recently de vised a plan by which the presenc of chicory in coffee could be de termined. After testing it unde conditions where he could measur its efficiency, he tried it on sample of liquid coffee obtained from abou twenty-five Philadelphia restau rants. The number that showe adulteration was amazing. Arrest were made, and last Tuesday sev eral defendants walked up to th magistrate's office and paid fines Among these were some of the bes known restaurant men in Philadel phia; one in particular has for year been publicly preaching righteou ness of all sorts.

This is fine. From now on fi will not be made of the grocer an flesh of the restaurant keeper. I cidentally, this ought to improv the demand for coffee.

Florida cucumbers are very high —$6 per box. Hothouse cues are also high.

Here is a Real Case of Middleman and Inflated Prices

Almost every paper and maga-ne printed are comparing in some rm or another the—to them, rge—difference between the value a product in the producer's nds, and its cost to the consumer. his difference, which I repeat, al-ost always seems excessive to the nsumer, is described as the graft an abnormal number of middle-en who should be forced to take ss for their work or drop out al-gether.

In most of these cases the differ-ce between value in the produc-'s hands and selling price to the nsumer is not excessive at all, nen the service which it involves considered. But I am hoping at those who are attacking the ddleman will not get hold of an cident which accidentally came to notice last week. If they do ey will find the facts which they nt ready made for them. In case I speak of the cost of the middleman and the value of his services would certainly seem to be inflated. I think this is true of most products in the class of that I am about to mention—patent medicines.

A young man of some ingenuity is about to market a certain medicinal oil which has proven to have great value in certain intestinal disorders. This oil is already being used quite largely in its original state, without color or added flavor. The young man I speak of proposes to add a simple flavor, which is expected to conceal the somewhat unpleasant natural flavor, give the thing a coined name and put it on the market. His selling price to consumers will be 50 cents a half pint bottle, which is equivalent to $1 a pint, $2 a quart, or $8 per gallon.

Any consumer can buy this oil for $1 per gallon. Nevertheless, the young promoter figures that even these high prices will net him only about 8 cents a half pint bottle, which certainly nobody would complain of. Yet look how completely the selling price to the consumer gets away from any relation whatever to the original cost of the thing itself—the oil. Here are the promoter's figures:—

Cost of ½ pt. oil	.0625
Flavoring	.02
Bottle	.03
Carton and label	.015
Tissue paper, cork and bands,	.01
Advertising	.10
Labor	.01
Druggist's profit	.17
	.4175
Manufacturer's profit	.0825
Selling price	.50

Here is a thing which need cost no consumer more than 6¼ cents a half pint or $1 per gallon, offered to him, in very slightly changed form, for 50 cents a half pint or $8 per gallon! True, various things are added to it, but are they worth what they cost? That of course is the point. If the various things added to it represent real values—real conveniences—to the consumer, then they are properly charged for, and would be if they mounted up to a dollar and fifty cents.

In this case I am inclined to doubt that the consumer is getting services representing eight times the value of the oil itself. I am sure they would not be worth all that difference to me.

Selling Shredded Wheat at Cost.

Erie, Pa., Feb. 9, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir.—Mr. C. R. Breedin, of Manning, S. C., asks for an explanation of my argument that sometimes it pays to sell Shredded Wheat, for instance, at a loss.

Retail selling conditions differ greatly in different parts of the United States. The up-to-date grocer or any other retailer has sale days or sells some good article at a special price almost every day. I think a man can sell goods at cost sometimes and still not be a crook. A man who is dishonest in his dealings to the public will surely be found out sooner or later. Brains are a very valuable asset even to a groceryman. There are a great many who do not see the logic of advertising in one way or another. The fellow (as Mr. Breedin puts it) that has a hard row to hoe and resorts to forms of competition that no decent man wants to think of are entirely beyond me. I only follow the straight way and never investigate those that are crooked; they are below me and my class and I know nothing of the trickery so many are always so suspicious of finding. We consider ourselves up to date, and where there is clean competition we follow. When a competitor sells under the market he generally has made a buy under the regular price and we know we cannot follow. Shredded Wheat is in a class by itself; there is no other cereal in the market that would be a substitute for this article. It is the best seller in our locality and a very staple article. Selling it at cost does not make us a loser—it stimulates our trade and we get the good out of it. You no doubt have often lent a friend a dollar and never charged a thing for the loan, and when it was returned you did not feel as though you were out anything by the transaction. It is the same way with our selling this article at cost. Almost everybody makes other purchases when buying Shredded Wheat and we lose nothing by doing as we do.

Hoping you see this as I would have it understood, I am, very sincerely,

GEO. W. KAPPELT.

A Mail Order House?

Red Lion, Pa., Feb. 9, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Would you please tell us if the Brown Fence and Wire Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, is a mail-order house? We believe they have a good strong fence and also at the right price, but if they are a mail-order house we want no dealings with them.

Also, do you know what will remove painting oil from a cement floor? Our paint barrels leaked before we knew it, now we can't get the oil off the cement.

Truly yours,
D. C. KAUFFMAN.

The Brown Fence and Wire Co., of Cleveland, are rated up to $150,000 first credit, and appear in the rating books as manufacturers. We do believe they advertise their fence to consumers, but we do not know how extensively. Can any subscriber tell?

As to removing oil from a cement floor, that, too, is somewhat of a puzzler. Perhaps some subscriber can throw light on it.

Trying to Get the Local Retailer and the Country Editor to Work Together.

Chicago, February 10, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We wish to bring before your readers in a brief way some of the work we are doing in the interest of increasing business in the small towns and country.

We are sending to the hundreds of editors in the small towns of the country a message same as we are enclosing in this letter. The object should be plain to you. We are boosting the country editor because he can and ought to co-operate with the merchant whom you represent in securing through modern methods of merchandising the trade of his home town and the farmer.

Respectfully,
HOME TOWN ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
W. A. Gardner, Secy.

The message which the Home Town Association is issuing for the above purpose is as follows:—

The attention of the entire country is repeatedly called to such questions as conservation of land, water-power, irrigation, forests and other natural resources. The control of our turbulent rivers is calling for flood protection. The whole country is a-quiver with new mehods and new ideas. We are witnessing the accomplishment of great things. The Panama Canal is now open; the Keokuk Dam has been harnessed and is creating over 225,000 horse-power for light and power; New York State is spending $180,000,000 to improve the Erie Canal, and the Good Roads movement is winning on every hand.

Out in the country there is a force that we hear little about, but this force is doing a great work for the country. Every politician who wants an office realizes it. Every merchant who is alive knows it. Every school teacher and preacher who wants to improve school or civic life has to have its help. No celebation is attempted without its asistance. No funerals or weddings or fires escape it. No sales of any kind—sheriff's sales, bargain sales, fire sales, or any other kind, take place without its knowledge. Even the great political parties recognize and patronize it. The railways, until recently—very recently—thought so much of it that they carried it free. And this force, so potent in our great republic, is the Country Editor and his paper. He is exercising a greater power than he may realize, and he is very poorly paid, as a rule, for the valuable service he renders; yet he is a power for great good, and no movement can make much progress in the country if he opposes it, and it will probably need his help to succeed. At present he is the most misunderstood figure in American life. He may have to act in any capacity, from "printer's devil" to editor, and he can do that. He attends all important public functions, political, social and religious. He is supposed to know all about the government, local, State and National; the tariff and currency bill; income tax; the best way of regulating "Trusts;" and he has to read a few dozen exchanges, set type, write copy, read proof, solicit job work, advertising and subscriptions. But there is one big job ahead of him, perhaps the biggest he has ever tackled. He must lead the merchants out into the big field of better business and more of it, by inducing the merchants to properly advertise. He must teach them to use the methods in advertising that sell goods; he must show them the value of illustrations; and above all, he must make the name and price plain.

When we think how these men have helped to make the country, we have no doubt that when the opportunity is squarely put before them, they will grasp it, and by leading the way to a more prosperous country life, help to conserve the greatest force of the nation—the 47 per cent. who live in the small towns and the country.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Grocery World and General Merchant" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

V.—How and Where to Instal and Operate a Coffee Roasting Machine.

By William B. Harris.

Having placed an order for a coffee roasting machine it would be natural to consider next the selection of the blends to be used and the coffees from which they are to be made up. This is rather a complex subject and therefore it would seem to be better to finish with the details concerning the machine itself before taking up the question of coffee.

It is probable that the actual location of the roaster will be determined upon before the shipment is received. It is usually considered that the best position for this small machine is in one of the front windows. Here the advertising feature plays an important part. Persons passing the window are attracted by the machine, particularly if it is in operation, and seemingly the interest never wears off as someone will usually be found looking in whenever coffee is being roasted. Then again, this affords an opportunity of running the exhaust out underneath the window so that the passer-by gets the aroma of roasting coffee, which is always pleasant. It apparently makes no difference whether the coffee is a low grade or a high grade, so long as it is not a damaged product, as the aroma from coffee in the process of roasting always makes a favorable impression.

In connection with the exhaust, it might be well to note that there should be a fine wire screen at the outlet to keep back the chaff that would otherwise be blown out into the street, and there should also be a shallow box made to catch the chaff so that it can be removed after the day's roasting is finished. It is a good plan to do some of the roasting at noon and again late in the afternoon as people are going to their homes. This will influence many a customer, who is bound to come back after she has taken home a package of freshly roasted coffee, if the roasting be properly done.

With the large machine, the half-bag type or over, it is rather better to have it placed in the back of the store. They take up more room and require a better plan for handling the exhaust. These machines are always noticed and as they are handsomely finished make an attractive store fixture.

With the machine located and running, we must next consider taking off the first roast with the chances fairly good that it will be discharged either entirely too light or burned to a crisp. Here is where more than one dealer hesitates before ordering a machine. He thinks of his blends, looks at the appearance of his coffees and wonders whether he could roast coffees to look at all like his present stock. suppose he asks himself these questions: Are there any retail dealers doing it? Did they know any more about it when they started? Almost every wholesale or jobbing house has a boy who roasts the samples that are to be tested. He has to learn to take the coffee off at the exact shade and so can any grocer if he wants to do so.

When starting operations the gas burner should show a full blue flame where the burner is properly adjusted. If the gas flame is yellow the pressure is not right. Turn the flame full at the start and permit the cylinder to become thoroughly heated, then feed in the coffee to be roasted. For the first roast a few pounds of medium or low grade Santos should be secured so that the grocer will have an inexpensive coffee to experiment with. He should also secure a sample of roasted coffee of the shade or color that he is accustomed to deliver to his customers. This sample or type should be placed in a pan where it can be used for comparison with the coffee he is roasting. The gas burner should be kept full until the coffee is snapping freely and then it should be turned down slightly, not quite half. From now on the coffee should be watched and the trier used until the roast is very near the proper color or ready to be taken off, then the flame should be turned as low as possible.

When the desired shade of the roast has been reached the coffee should be discharged into the cooler and the cooling fan started. If there is any doubt as to the exact color at the start it is always better to get the coffee off a shade or two light, as it can then be compared in the cooler, and if not dark enough it can be placed back again in the cylinder. If, however, the coffee is over-roasted there is nothing that can be done with it except to sell it as a high roast product. Even if the coffee is over-roasted it need not result in a total loss, as there is usually some demand for a high roast coffee, particularly if there is an Italian trade in the neighborhood.

The grocer will feel a little nervous at first and should continue roasting small lots of Santos coffee four or five pounds at a time until he feels he can take off a roast at about a right shade. After he has once become accustomed to doing so he will find that he has very little difficulty in turning out a satisfactory roasted coffee, and as he progresses he will be able to roast his various blends without referring any type for comparison.

What Do You Think of Your Coffee Department, Anyway?

Are you satisfied with it? Is it paying all it could? Is it doing all the business it could? Do you regard it as the most profitable department of your business? If not what is your most profitable department and why isn't coffee? The "Grocery World and General Merchant" would very much like to have some expressions from retailers on this subject.—Ed.

The National Wholesale Gro-er's Association is taking up the uestion of uniform food stand-rds. Circulars have been issued or use in legislative work. These irculars were prepared by D. T. ckerly, of Breed, Abbott & Morgan, the counsel of the asso-iation.

Mr. Ackerly reviews the prog-ess of food legislation, Federal nd State. He argues strongly gainst State standards of food. e points out that with State andards there would be diver-ence of conflict instead of uni-rmity. The honest manufac-irer would find it impossible, erhaps, to comply with conflict-ig requirements in various tates. The burden of these reg-lations would restrict trade and ld to the cost of food.

It is also pointed out that reg-ations prescribing the exact ements and chemical constitu-nts of food would be an incen-ve to the dishonest manufactur- to adulterate his product and t not come within the condem-ation of the law.

In behalf of the association, Mr. ckerly urges that the Federal overnment should take the lead d establish proper standards, d that these should be indorsed the statutes of the various ates, thus obtaining uniformity roughout the country.

has PARKE'S UNMATCHABLE COFFEE or it would not have stood the storms of years and still be sailing straight ahead on the voyage of progress. It is not roasted as it comes fresh from the steamer, but is piled in our warehouses, where more or less aging improves it according to its nature. It is then roasted by operators who do nothing else, and have done nothing else, from Monday morning until Saturday night for years. They treat every Coffee as it should be to get out of it the best there is in it. We mention this because some think that all there is in the roasting of Coffee is to brown it, but there are many other features to be considered, and that is why

Some years ago our business was all in original packages, but conditions have so changed that to meet the exact requirements of the day we pack a most attractive line in cartons, cans and handsome, strong, lined bags. Probably you are one of the many merchants who for various reasons are not selling the Coffee you should, and if so we can readily guarantee to you that some of the Parke Lines will suit your case and increase your Coffee sales very convincingly, as they have done for many others. Our business is no experiment, but the result of wide experience with thousands of merchants in various States.

Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor.

The association indorses prior estimates that, outside the hospital, the minimum amount required for food each day for adults in this city is 42 cents. The association finds that a family of five can live in Manhattan on an income of $1,050 to $1,150 a year and can be fairly comfortable.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Trading in spot coffee is quiet and prices are steady. Among the jobbers there is reported a better inquiry from some parts of the country, but in general the business is slow. Prices are on the basis of 9½ to 9⅝ cents for Rio No. 7s and 12 to 12⅛ cents for Santos 4s. Spot stocks of mild grades seem to be within small compass and prices are firm although there is only a routine demand.

In the tea trade there is a fair jobbing business. Prices are steady. In the wholesale market there is considerable interest in the meeting of the new Tea Board which is to fix the standards for the coming year. It is the general opinion that there will be few changes, as comparatively little tea was shut out last year because of quality.

Granulated sugar is dull. Arbuckles and Howells are behind in their deliveries on contracts. On new business the American and Warner quote 4.10 cents on standard granulated and the other refiners are 10 points lower.

Japan rice is easy in tone, while domestic grades of rice are quiet and steady. Honduras is dull. Reports from the South indicate the same firm tone as heretofore because of the strong situation as to rough rice.

Spices are quiet, with merely a grinding demand covering the general list. Peppers, cloves and cassias are firm.

Distributors are fairly well supplied with molasses for current requirements, so the market is quiet. Prices are firm. The quality of the new crop is better than that of a year ago and this is a factor in upholding prices.

In canned vegetables there is some improvement in the demand for spot supplies. The demand is for present requirements. There is a special demand for the cheap r grades of peas. Offers of 62½ ents for desirable stock have een made by several buyers who re willing to take large-sized lots t that price, but holders are said) be unwilling to accept less ıan 65 cents for lots that are ally desirable. Some of the lo- ıl jobbers are said to have ought considerable quantities at ıe higher price in the last few ays. There is not much activity future peas. The packers are ot willing to shade the quota- ons made at the opening. Fancy rn of State packing and other ncy grades are firm and other ades somewhat easier. It is id that local jobbers in some stances have made important ntracts for the 1914 pack of aine corn at 95 cents Portland, t the packers generally declare at they will not accept less than cents. There is only a quiet mand for tomatoes. Prices are ing maintained on the basis of cents for No. 3 tomatoes,). b. Baltimore, and 50 cents for . 2s.

There is a routine jobbing de- nd for canned fruits and prices ıain firm because of limited erings at first hands.

Dried prunes from California l the Northwest are firm, al- ugh the demand is only of a derate jobbing character. It is l that the stocks held here are a few hands and that most of jobbers are reaching the bot- ı of their supplies. The statis- l position of prunes, as figured the packers and brokers, is es- ially strong both here and on coast. There is a fair job- g demand for peaches, spot ks of which are light and es steady. The situation as to cots is similar. The local mar- for seeded coast raisins is quiet, the general tone of the trade rm. As a rule, sellers of loose ins are lightly supplied and not willing to shade prices. s rumored that several car- ls of old crop California mus- l loose raisins have been of- d a little below the usual quo- ons, but the rumor has not ı verified. are not willing to pay. What business is put through is of a routine kind to fill in requirements, and prices are usually on the basis of $4.35 for spring wheat patents in jute. Many of the mills are asking higher prices up to $4.45 and even above that price. On the other hand there are reports of occasional sales at much lower prices. It is said that the General Baking Co. bought 25,000 barrels for prices much below the usual quotations. It is certain, however, that some buyers who have been trying to place fairly large orders at concessions have been unable to find sellers who would cut the prices on strictly high-grade flour, especially in the popular brands.

There has been a further slump in eggs and they are down at the lowest prices of the present season. The business is generally slow and the market weak and unsettled. Storage eggs are being offered at lower prices than heretofore. Nearby white eggs are more plentiful and share in the general weakness. The best grades of fresh-gathered, Western eggs have a range of 27 to 30 cents and the top prices of nearby white eggs are from 35 to 38 cents. Good grades of storage eggs are quoted from 22 to 25 cents. The best grades of European eggs have a range from 20 to 25 cents.

The demand for butter has been broadening and the market has tended slightly upward in the last week. There is an improved demand for storage stock as well as for fresh creamery. The fresh creamery extras range from 27½ to 28 cents, with occasional sales of gilt-edged quality at 28½ cents. The firsts are moving fairly well at 26 to 27 cents. Seconds are sold at 23½ to 25½ cents. The held butter brings from ½ to 1 cent less than corresponding grades of fresh creamery. There is still a surplus of undergrades, both fresh and storage. Process is quiet, with prices favoring the buyers. The best grades of process are sold at 21 to 23 cents.

in my judgment. The point of to the consumer is not only the improvement in quality which will result from doing your own coffee roasting, but what you refer to as a "marked saving." Surely a marked saving in any food product in this day of high costs, is too important to be passed by with a mere casual reference. If the saving is "marked" it should certainly have been presented in detail. I would have quoted the prices which I charged for given blends when I bought my coffee roasted, and compared them with the prices charged for the identical blends now that I bought them green and roasted them myself. If there is a "marked saving," as this advertisement says it should certainly be exploited and played up in all sorts of ways.

Judged as an advertising idea I should think that a live grocer with a machine like this could get all sorts of the most valuable advertising out of it.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up in strict rotation.

This idea is good, but I do not believe it has been carried out quite as well as it could be. I should have used a heading something like this:— scription all dealers use whether they roast their own stuff or not.

In another way this circular stops short of what it could have done.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is in a fair con-ion, and a moderate steady busi-ss is being done at steady prices. ie demand is fair for the season, d the line is steady to firm be-ıse no new tea shows any large ›ply.

Coffee.

Rio and Santos coffees are un-ınged in price and not very ac-e. Conditions are substantially they were a week ago. Mild ıdes, however, are booming and ·y firm, on account of small spot ›ply. In the last few weeks the ·ance in some grades, notably gotas, has been 1 to 1½ cents. e shipping conditions in the pri-ry countries are somewhat un-tled, and there is not a great ıl of coffee on spot. Perhaps se conditions may continue for ouple of months. The present nand for mild coffee is good. a and Mocha are unchanged l quiet.

Sugar.

The sugar market shows no nge for the week. Refined still es on a basis of 4 to 4.05 cents granulated, according to the ling of the refiner selling. Raws about unchanged for the week, the feeling is not particularly ong. It is understood that the ners feel now that they will be cy if they can get 4 cents for nulated after March. The de-ıd for refined sugar is only fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the ck, and therefore compound ıp is unchanged, the demand ıg seasonable. Sugar syrup is l at ruling prices, molasses sea-ably active at unchanged prices.

Fish.

The demand for mackerel has yet wakened. It is only moder-though some fish are selling ry day. Prices remain steady firm and practically unchanged. l, hake and haddock are wanted ı fair way, and show no change price. The market is steady. mon of all grades is unchanged in fair demand for the season. mestic sardines are unchanged and very firm, speaking of quarter oils. Mustards have advanced to within a much closer relation to oils than usual. Imported sardines are still very scarce and high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are firmer, though no change has occurred during the week. The market is steady to firm on a basis of 70 cents f. o. b. in a large way for Maryland standard 3s. No. 2s, however, have advanced 2½ cents. With 3s at 70 2s should be 50, but at the advance they are 52½ in a large way f. o. b. The fact that they are relatively scarcer than 3s is the reason. Future tomatoes are not wanted except special brands. Expectations seem to be more or less general that spot goods will advance before the end of the season. Corn is quiet, both spot and future. Future Maine corn is now generally offered on the basis quoted last week. Peas, both spot and future, are unchanged and quiet. Apples dull at the moment but improvement expected. Prices are unchanged. California canned goods are unchanged and dull. Small Eastern staple canned goods seasonably active.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show nothing more than a fair seasonable business, at unchanged prices. Peaches and apricots alike quiet at ruling figures. Raisins dull in the East, but a good demand reported from the West. Prices steadily maintained so far as the combination is concerned. Currants and other dried fruits dull and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans show no change, and light demand. Continued cold weather will increase the movement. Domestic marrows fairly active at unchanged prices. California limas show another advance of somewhat over 10 points, and some demand. Scarcity is given as the reason. Green and Scotch peas dull and unchanged in price; market is weak.

Butter.

The receipts of fresh butter are about normal for the season and the market is firm at the prices ranging, at an advance of about 1 cent per pound higher than a week ago. The demand for fresh butter continues to be very good, absorbing all the receipts on arrival. The stocks in cold storage are very large and the demand is very light for all grades of storage butter. The market is very dull.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs for the past week have been very liberal and the market is well supplied on the present basis of quotations. The future price depends on weather conditions. The only condition that will advance the egg market is a continued cold spell. Storage eggs are about cleaned up.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm on the present basis of quotations, with a light consumptive demand. Stocks are also reported to be light and the market is firm. No change in price is expected in the near future.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is firm at ¼ cent per pound advance over last week, with a fair consumptive demand. Both pure and compound lard are steady with a moderate consumptive demand. Barreled pork, dried beef and canned meats are steady at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Standard Canned Goods.

Those who attended the big conventions of the National Canners' and the National Brokers' Associations, held in Baltimore last week, felt well repaid for having made the trip. It certainly was the largest convention of those engaged in the canning trade ever held in this country, and there never was a meeting when the officers and the members did more work, real, substantial work, on the business in hand, and at the same time made every visitor, jobber and others, profit by being present. Following this convention, the campaign of publicity inaugurated several years ago will receive an additional impetus and cause a still greater increase in the consumption of canned foods and dried fruits throughout the country. The full details will be published in the trade papers, and they will make mighty interesting reading for those who were not there, as well as for those who were there.

During last week the tomato market was fairly active, and at the close the prices were stronger, and in some instances a peg or two higher than they were at the close of the week previous. The improvement in the market appears to be based entirely upon the increased consumption of tomatoes, which has been greatly helped by the warm, open weather existing in the majority of the States up to this time. At this writing it looks like the improvement in the market prices has come to stay, and when the spring trade fully opens up the prices are expected to reach the same level as they did last spring, or near to it. The jobbers nearly everywhere are regaining their confidence in the stability and in the outlook for canned tomatoes.

Sweet potatoes are again fairly active, with a decidedly upward trend to the prices. It looks like they will reach higher prices during February and March. Outside of the usual small every day orders for little assorted lots of canned vegetables there was not much doing in this line of foods in this market during last week, chiefly because the convention hall was the chief attraction to everyone located here interested in the business. There were no important changes in the quotations for vegetables during last week. Spinach and string beans are firmer, but not any higher as to prices than they were.

It was a quiet week in this market for canned fruits. What little activity there was appears to be confined to pears, apples and peaches. The price changes during last week were very few and very unimportant.

The warm weather during the last two weeks causes a slacking up in the demand for cove oysters, and the prices of some of the different sizes are a shade lower to-day.

Imported Fish Specialties.

Our agent in Holland cables that there are very few good Holland herring left at the present time; demand is good and prices are advancing. There is still a lot of herring left over from lots caught last spring, and these are being offered at very low prices, 10 or 15 cents per keg less than the market price for regular goods, summer or fall caught Holland herring. Of course this will hurt the market. Besides, the new catch of spring herring will start about February 15th. Then, if the catch is good, prices are likely to come down. Market is just good, and the demand for herring is very good indeed. Stocks are not large enough to worry about.

Mackerel.—There is a good hand-to-mouth demand and prices are rather firm.

Scotch herring firm and in fair demand.

Norway herring in good demand, and real fine fat fish and large rather scarce.

Imported Oil Sardines.—Absolutely no change in the situation. In Norway of course a continued failure of catch. In France the sprat fishing has begun and keeps the packers busy. In Portugal there is very little fishing, in fact not more than can be absolutely consumed and acquired by the trade waiting for these goods.

Rice.

The spirit of optimism still prevails throughout the business community though the outlook was anything but reassuring a month ago. Consumers have been going slow in buying for their current requirements, but there is more disposition apparent to broaden out in purchases. At the same time the trade at large continues to operate on a conservative basis, feeling strongly the unwisdom of too great expansion for a while yet. In general, however, the state of trade is regarded as in a healthier condition than for some considerable time back.

In view of this general improvement the market holds strong for all grades of Honduras, and under a decidedly more active movement prices are steadily climbing up. The output of Japan during the past two or three weeks has been quite phenomenal, though expected, on account of the easier and very reasonable prices quoted, making it much the best proposition above every other kind of rice offering. High class Honduras is being rapidly cleaned up and commands full figures though prices on all grades are toned up. Foreigns still move slow and appear to have lost the attraction which they held at the opening of the season in October-November.

At the South, along the Atlantic Coast, the reports are that the demand has slowed down and conditions devoid of interest. At New Orleans the output continues active and the mills are having no trouble in keeping well cleaned up, and prices rule strong at advancing values. In the interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, advices are to the effect that the mills have not been able to force any weakness in the rough market and are accepting the situation. There are, however, a number of mills as yet unable to secure enough rough on account of the high prices to turn their wheels with profit.

Cables and correspondence from abroad note rough rice market easier; "spot cleaned" steady; "forward Burma" weaker; Siam quiet; Saigon neglected.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

"That's All We Want For The Salad."—There were two of them and they were figuring on a salad for fifteen. Two young women that didn't know it all and the thirteen that were coming knew they (the two) didn't know it all. The salesman sized up the situation and when she said "that's all we want for the salad" it was time for him to act.

You will need a little paprika to sprinkle over the dressing after it is spread. We sell it in the sifting top bottle at 10 cents. No, no, it isn't hot. It's a sweet pepper, though red, and it possesses a real nice flavor.

Now in addition to this I would suggest a bottle of capers. These add so much to the appearance of your salad—being perfectly green and tiny and most agreeable to the taste.

People living in the small towns—living in a simple though refined way, appreciate such suggestions. They're not familiar with the smartest thing at Churchill's nor with the latest touch at Martin's.

And Now To Business.—Are you selling goods? Really and truly selling goods? After you have taken an order for a dozen articles to-morrow stop and think how many of these you "sold." Maybe not one. Is that salesmanship? Certainly not. You're neglecting an opportunity. You're neglecting your duty in fact. The woman you took the order from had just twelve items on her memorandum and you let her go out without selling her the thirteenth. And you have thirteen hundred to talk about! Don't imagine that I consider every boy who reads this guilty of such an act, but if you are guilty it's your eyes I want to open. "Straight Talks," as I implied in a former article, are to make you worth more to your employer. Your negligence in not selling goods may be a lack of realization of lost opportunity or want of training. Anyway, start in this very week and I promise you that you'll be better satisfied with yourself. This to me is of such importance that it is with an effort that I finish the weekly article without making reference to it. Just remember that any fellow who can write a fair hand and remember prices can take an order. The clerk with something to him goes him a "lot better."

Hardware

The Retailers' Convention.

During the past week—Tuesday to Friday—it is estimated 2,000 retail hardware merchants were in Philadelphia attending the thirteenth annual convention and exhibition of the Pennsylvania Retail Hardware Association. The members of this active body are not confined solely to Pennsylvania, but include the trade in New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, with a possibility of covering western New York State in another year. It is a virile organization, and its proceedings, discussions and actions should be and are of interest to every merchant who handles hardware in any form, stoves, paints, brushes and house furnishings.

Sessions of the association were held every morning at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, and during the afternoon and evening the members and the visiting trade attended the exhibition held in the Third Regiment Armory. It is the opinion of prominent manufacturers and jobbers that while business is not so active as a year ago, there are indications sales will not run behind. This is shown by increased orders in February from the travelers, who are preparing for the regular selling campaign.

Prices are not being shaded, nor concessions granted; on the contrary quotations for staple lines remain firm, with the new lines offering at an advance.

The business meetings of the association were well attended and a lively interest was taken in the topics brought forward for debate. A delegation of dealers from New York was accorded a special reception at the opening of the sessions. Addresses were delivered by N. A. Gladding, Indianapolis, Ind., president American Hardware Manufacturers' Association; C. W. Asbury, Philadelphia, Advisory Board American Manufacturers' Association. Likewise by these Philadelphia jobbers: J. E. Baum, president Supplee-Biddle Hardware Co.; A. H. Bryant, secretary Simmons Hardware Co.; Charles Z. Tryon, president of Philadelphia Hardware Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. Tryon, among his other pertinent remarks, said: "What this country most needs is for Congress and every State Legislature to give the people and their institutions a chance to adjust themselves to the mass of laws which have already been framed. We are being told how to buy and sell by men who never took part in a commercial transaction in their lives; and how to treat our employees, by men who never either employed or were employed a day in their lives. There are too many theories in the public eye."

Of the jobber's position, a moot question in the trade, Mr. Tryon observed: "We would be led to believe by some industrial reformers that the jobber was created by a trade or industry to extort an extra profit from the consumer. But an unprejudiced view of the case would convince anyone that this cannot be so. The jobber would not exist for six months if there were not the same economic need for his services to-day that demanded him in the earliest days of organized commerce, and that demand will never disappear."

The speeches of Messrs. Baum and Bryant were to the point also.

The retailers were not loath in expressing their opinions of mail-order houses, the parcel post and other trade matters which came in for sharp criticism, especially from W. P. Lewis, Huntingdon, Pa., secretary of the association. It was evident the average dealer was in a complaining mood on these subjects, and did not feel disposed to meet or adjust himself to unavoidable conditions of the existing situation.

At the exhibition the display of goods by manufacturers and jobbers was striking and in many instances artistic. It was a market as well as a general exposition, and a prize was awarded to the firm having booked the greatest number of sales. Among the distinctive exhibits were the following: Simmons Hardware Co., St. Louis, Mo., in charge of A. H. Bryant, of the Philadelphia branch; James A. Carroll, of the company's advertising department at headquarters, was present the greater part of the week. The Simmons Co.'s display of "Keen Kutter" goods was the largest and handsomest on the floor, and consequently was thronged with visitors. A fine line of literature pertaining to their lines and specialties was distrib ted.

A three-fuel modern Glenwo range, shown for the first tim together with samples of their oth products in the same line, co prised the exhibit of Weir Sto Co., Taunton, Mass., in charge R. H. Babbitt, Jr. This compa claims to make the largest line plate cast cooking ranges of a manufacturer in the United Stat —a range every two minutes the day. Their dealer's catalog costs $5 to produce.

Conspicuous exhibits were al arranged by Henry Disston Sons, Inc., saws, Philadelphi Corbin Cabinet Lock Co., an ela orate display of Yale locks a padlocks, in charge of Edward Griswold, of the Philadelph branch; Reading Stove Wor (Orr, Painter & Co.), in char of William and Jesse Orr Thor son; Pennsylvania Saw Co., va adium steel saws—"King of hand saws"—Frackville, Pa., ab represented and skilfully demo strated by R. W. Griffith; Sa Padlock and Hardware Co., La caster, Pa., locks and brass goo in charge of Elam Hershey, re dent manager, Philadelphia; Jo W. Masury & Son, prepared pain varnishes, specialties, etc., Ne York. This is the first time t company has appeared in a har ware exhibition, and their displ was not overlooked by buyers a dealers. Revere Rubber Co., ru ber goods, Chelsea, Mass.; Pete Cartridge Co., ammunition, Cinci nati; H. L. Bennett, window gla etc., Philadelphia; Peerless Tra ing Co., waste balers, a uniq machine in many ways, Alban N. Y.; Simonds Mfg. Co., saw Fitchburg, Mass. Besides this pa tial list there were a number other firms whose goods will appe to the modern merchant who ai to carry quick selling and the mo approved merchandise.

Before final adjournment, a by a unanimous vote, the name the association was changed "The Pennsylvania and Atlant Seaboard Retail Hardware Asso ation."

"As Easy to Handle as a Can of Tomatoes"

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is as easy for the grocer to handle as a can of tomatoes or a bottle of pickles. It's ready to sell when you get it. It requires no weighing, no wrapping, no tying—we've done all that for you at our refinery. We pack FRANKLIN SUGAR in CARTONS because the margin in sugar is so small that if you buy it in bulk and weigh it out, put it in bags, stand for the cost of bags, twine, labor and loss by overweight, you LOSE MONEY. FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR enables you to make a PROFIT instead of a LOSS, because it costs you nothing to handle. Your customers like the clean, neat CARTONS and, once having bought FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, will always ask you for it because of its cleanliness, quality and purity.

The Convenience of the "Container"

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is packed in containers holding 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs., according to the grade of sugar, the fastest selling grades not being packed less than 48 lbs. to the CONTAINER and you are thus enabled to buy to suit the needs of your trade. The CONTAINER is a heavy fibre case that is guaranteed to carry its contents in perfect condition, but, is easier for you to open than a box or barrel—a penknife will open it.

"FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is the cleanest, purest, finest grade sugar that can be made, and the CARTON keeps it clean. All our customers like it and I'm sure you will if you try it."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

"Stickerei" is a new importation of German edging being offered.

Young, Smyth, Field Co. are confident spring retail trade will be normal. They say: "Our confidence as to the spring trade results from the belief that all possible disturbing factors as to business—such as legislation, to which business must readjust itself—are now behind rather than ahead of us. The country is looking ahead rather than into the past. Further, all trade signs bear out this belief."

Out-of-the-City Demand for High Grade Goods.

Merchants outside of the large cities are not buying so freely as in the past of high grade goods. Their preferences, as expressed in the spring orders, are shown in cheaper material—a leaning toward economy, say the jobbers and manufacturers. First hands, however, are sure that the merchants are "playing safe," as the saying goes; in other words, have noticed the change in the demand over the counter, hence their attitude in the placing of spring orders.

Buyers in Europe for New Ideas.

Representatives of prominent importers and makers are now in the European markets closely watching the developments in the patterns, designs, styles and fabrics of textile goods. France is now showing lines which, as described by a traveled expert, will not reach this country for three years. Producers take no "long shots" in attempting to market the "early birds." There is too much of a hazard in crowding on pressure until the new discoveries have been fully tested by the Parisienne freaks. The wise buyer of foreign specialties generally knows a good thing when he sees it and the proper time to spring it on the American buyer.

Cotton Blankets and Collections.

Collections are slow and retail merchants are not taking care of the bills with their customary promptitude is the complaint of a large jobbing house, which travels forty men, covering the country from coast to coast and from the Gulf to the Canadian line. The firm in question carries everything in wash and dress goods, blankets, etc., for which there is an improved demand; not, as it avers, on account of the new tariff, which has not affected prices in the least; but there is a greater natural consumption. Several mills are sold up for the entire year, especially true of ginghams. With the building of houses equipped with better and more modern heating apparatus, a run has commenced on cotton blankets. Cold houses are growing less year by year, and therefore heavy bed clothing is suffering a decline. With improved machinery the nap of the cotton blanket has been raised to a degree of softness and thickness closely resembling that made from wool, and the preference for these goods is consequently marked.

Boots and Shoes

Selling Methods Changing—Advertised Goods.

Selling methods are changing radically in the shoe trade, especially for ladies' goods, is the reluctant conclusion of a leading manufacturer, in the course of a desultory talk with the "Grocery World and General Merchant" a few days ince. "It is like this," observed the shoe man: "For nearly eight or ten years the tendency has been for the buyer to delay placing his order to the last minute, so to speak, and thus it is a sort of hand-to-mouth order at that. Time was when orders for spring delivery commenced to come in about October, and by November 1st at least 80 per cent. of the retailer's spring stock was on our books.

"Gradually the buying became more uncertain; or abnormal, if you please. That is to say, merchants buy according to no rule—just as they need, as a matter of fact, and the result is that instead of having the bulk of my orders in the factory in December, I am extremely fortunate to get 40 per cent. The remainder must be gone after from time to time—sometimes as many as six calls—before it is completed, with accompanying increased cost and loss of time. Prices should be better, but they are not, for the simple reason that the retailer—especially department stores which buy in large quantities—can command his own price if he comes in the market early in the fall for spring stock.

"Factories are thus placed at a disadvantage," continued the manufacturer. "Our overhead charges cannot be lessened, raw material has been and is steadily advancing; but we cannot make up the difference for the reason that we are called upon to make sacrifices; or, rather, accept most any figure in reason that may be offered in order to hold a desirable account. We cannot afford to close down our plants, if we can manage to keep moving even at a slight profit or even cost. The great trouble is that there is a great overproduction of shoes and footwear of every description, and while the quantity runs into many millions of dollars, the congestion is not relieved by the export trade, of which so much is heard through the newspapers, as only eighteen millions are sent abroad, and that is only a drop in the bucket.

"In common with other shoe manufacturers, we aim to have our product handled exclusively by one particular dealer in a town, if it is large enough. The small merchant, say in an agricultural community, however, will find it to his advantage to stock advertised goods. The quality, style, models, finishes, etc., of such lines are dependable factors in selling, and the buyer at retail more frequently than not is fully acquainted with their reputation and standing, as made known by the liberal use of advertising space in the best known general and trade publications. Trade thus gained is hard to switch. We have tried it out and therefore speak from experience."

"Sample Shoe" Stores.

Fake "sample shoe" and "cut price" shoe stores are an abomination to the legitimate dealer. The buying public have been swindled times out of mind by these fraudulent concerns. The local merchant, who is carrying goods of repute and merit, doubtless loses not a few sales, particularly with women, who are misled into buying at the "sample" or "cut price" shoe store. A number of leading manufacturers and jobbers are exerting themselves to lessen this evil. Massachusetts has a law dealing with the pestiferous fraud. The shoes offered in these places are not the genuine goods at any time or in a single instance. A pair of "straight" shoes may be used in a window display, but the article sold is shoddy. Merchants should make this plain to their clientele.

Travelers Getting Ready to Leav

March 1st will see the shoe tra elers out on their respective ter tories soliciting orders for fall d livery. Spring stock is book along about September 1st, a since the goods have been shipp the attention of manufacturers riveted on the production of t fall samples, which are near ready. Little change is noted women's fine footwear, exceptin that the "kidney" heel and a lar vamp will be in vogue. "Turne shoes, which sold conservative last season, are and will be in gre demand, according to shoe author ties. High, blunt toes, so popul in the West, but little favore East, are slowly but surely findi their way to the "scrap" hea Models for men are adhering mo closely to the so-called Englis lines. Standards are unchanged.

Swift Soaps Are Lower.

In announcing to the wholesale tra that effective with January 1, 1914, Swi & Co. would discontinue all free dea on their soap products, no mention w made about change in list prices.

It now develops that Swift & Co. ha gone a step farther and have made ver material reductions in the list prices o their soaps. An idea of the savin under the new list may be had from comparison of the new and old pric of Wool soap. The old price on th 10-oz. size was $6.75, while the ne price is $6.50.

We presume the new prices wer made possible by the elimination of th abnormal volume at periods when dea were in effect. The stand taken by th few large manufacturers of Nation prominence who have adopted the polic advocated by the National Associatio of Retail Grocers, should have the sup port of every retailer. This is espe ially true when the manufacturer, Swift & Co. have, give the retailer th advantage of the saving afforded by th new policy. This places the small mer chant on an equal basis with the bi fellow.

Local, State and National Associa tions of retail grocers have passed res olutions after resolutions denouncin the free deal. Will these grocers sup port and co-operate with the manufac turer who has the courage to make th radical change asked for by them? W believe they will, and further, that the will refuse to buy from the manufac turer who is still discriminating betwee the few large retailers and the man small ones.

If every retail grocer would do thi consistently for a short time, they woul soon find other manufacturers fallin in line and the square deal, instead o being a rare venture, will become th sales policy of all manufacturers.

It is up to the retailer now to sho his appreciation to Swift & Co. and th few other large manufacturers wh have adopted the square deal policy.—Adv.

Good Butter Covers Many Sins

¶ A store that keeps uniformly good butter is forgiven for many smaller sins, if it commits them. If this sounds fantastic, think it over and see if it isn't true.

¶ The demand for good butter is so insistent, and the protest against bad butter is so sharp, that if the butter is all right, other shortcomings can be endured.

¶ It's just another way of saying that a grocery store is often judged by its butter. Don't be afraid to be judged by Gurnse—ever. It is gilt-edged and always gilt-edged —its perfect uniformity has always been one of its chief virtues. Feature it—you'll never regret it.

If Your Only Consideration in Buying Coffee is Price, Don't Buy from Us

¶ It's remarkable how few customers we lose.

¶ Let us sell a man Coffee long enough to get him acquainted with our ways, and we'll hold him. Sometimes a cut price may tempt him away for a time but in most cases he comes back.

¶ Here's what we offer customers: The satisfaction of buying Coffee that they know will show the finest cup quality possible for the grade and at the price; Coffee that is standardized and will therefore always run uniform through even a hundred shipments.

¶ If when you buy coffee the only talking point is price, we can't do business satisfactorily, for we can't sell Coffee that way and we won't. Take this advice—don't start your coffee department on that basis, for it has no survival value, and it is only survival value that counts in building a business.

What a Great Store This Would Be

¶ If a grocer could fill his stock with goods as different from the mass as Private Estate Coffee is different from the common package brands of coffee, he would have a store so distinctive that people would come to it as a show place.

¶ There is enormous selling strength in novelty, and there is irresistible selling strength in it when novelty is coupled with superior quality. Private Estate Coffee is an unusual Mexican blend, packed in one-pound burlap bags that have no counterpart on the market. The coffee is good, the package is good—the whole proposition is a good way to escape the sober level of monotony that most package coffee represents, and to sell more coffee.

CCXLVI.—An Illinois Lawsuit Against an Employer, and a Lesson Which it Teaches to Other Employers.

A suit has just been begun in the courts of Illinois against a retail merchant, by a former employee twenty-two years old, under a law which is substantially the same in all States. If he can win his case in Illinois he or any other employee could probably win it in any other State. It is a damage suit and $15,000 are asked, as compensation for injuries which the plaintiff says he sustained by reason of his employer's negligence. The case is useful, because it points a place in which many an employer slips up in his treatment of employees.

In this Illinois case, the employer uses or used a weighing machine which was a very good machine, but had one bad habit. Unless the person operating it knew all about its peculiarities, especially about one peculiarity, there was one set of cogs which came very close to the operator's hand, and, if he failed to watch out, his hand might get caught. Accidents of this kind could be avoided in either of two ways. A special little screen could have been built into the machine at that point, but for some reason the manufacturer had not considered it necessary to do it. Or the employee who was to operate the machine could be taken to the machine and shown just what he had to look out for.

In this par ticular case nothing was done either to warn or protect the employee. No screen was provided and by some oversight he was not warned. He was given the duty of operating the machine, and some general instructions were given him, bu nothing was said about the danger point. The result was that all of the fingers of one hand were caught and crushed, and had to be amputated. The hand of a 22-year-old boy, with all his life before him, is gone and his career from any standpoint is wholly or partly ruined. About the worst possible situation, as every lawyer knows, which can possibly get before a jury. Some of the largest verdicts in the history of American courts have been given in such cases. This is the predicament into which this Illinois employer has gotten himself by neglecting to fulfill a fixed and unvarying obligation which the law fastens upon him and all other employers, namely, this:—

THAT WHEN AN EMPLOYER ORDERS AN INEXPERIENCED EMPLOYEE TO OPERATE ANY KIND OF MECHANISM OR MACHINERY WHICH IS DANGEROUS TO OPERATE OR INVOLVES DANGER OR RISK IN ANY MATERIAL DEGREE, SUCH EMPLOYER MUST EXPLAIN TO HIS EMPLOYEE THE RISKS AND DANGERS, UNLESS THEY ARE SO OBVIOUS THAT THE EMPLOYEE IS BOUND TO SEE THEM AND THUS ASSUMES THE RISK.

If this duty is neglected, and as a result of not being warned, the employee gets hurt, he can collect substantial damages from his employer, unless he, the employee, has in some way been careless himself and helped the accident to happen. In that event his case will often fail on account of contributory negligence, but in a case that must go to a jury, full of sympathy for the crippled plaintiff, the defense of contributory negligence is a forlorn hope. Nevertheless, that is about the only defense—if it is admitted that the employee was not warned in advance—which this Illinois employer has, and he may not even have that, for he may not be able to prove that the employee was in the least negligent.

The Illinois defendant is therefore facing the strong prospect of being compelled to pay damages which may extend into many thousand dollars, the loss of which may seriously affect his business. What a pity that he fell short in a thing that would have taken but five minutes to do, and which would have saved him an enormous amount of worry and bother, even if he escapes the payment of damages, which is not likely.

This rule of law has been enforced in an almost countless number of cases, and I suppose the amount of money which employers, large and small, have been compelled to pay to employees on account of it would stagger belief if it could be known. It has been enforced in connection with all manner of machines—elevators, sausage machines, printing presses, chopping machines, pressing machines, stamping machines, electrical motors and various appliances, steam engines, boilers, and very many more machines some of which even a small retail dealer may have in his store. It makes no difference what it is—the employer may consider it so simple and easy to run, and may understand it so thoroughly himself, that he deems it unnecessary to give an employee any detailed instructions about it. Precisely this has happened in thousands of cases. That is no excuse whatever. If the machine involves any risk or danger to the employee operating it, not absolutely open and obvious, then the risk and danger must be pointed out and explained. If the employee gets hurt after that from his own clumsiness, carelessness or inexperience, he can blame only himself—the employer goes free.

The same legal rule is invoked in situations not involving machinery, but where chemical combinations exuded poisonous fumes, or which ate the flesh or skin off the bodies of operators who had not been properly warned about it and so on. Here is the rule in a nutshell, it will cover every case that can possi arise under this principle: where an employer allows an emplo without warning, to expose him to any kind of latent danger, is, danger that is not obvious, is liable in damages if injury lows.

I know one large employer uses a number of machines, after he had been mulcted in d ages, adopted this rule. He brief descriptions printed on li cards of the four different machi which his employees were to called upon to operate. These scriptions were complete and pl particularly as to how to avoid ting mixed up with the mechani Every employee about to be as to operate a machine which he not before operated was compe to read this card, and an oral planation, with the machine in tion, was then made to him. general operation of this rule, only in large situations, but small, would cut down dam suits of this sort 90 per cent. w out a doubt.

Answer.—I have carefully r all of these papers.

My judgment is that you have a leg to stand on in your refu to go on with the Fashion Co pany's contract.

This contract was executed J uary 3, 1906, and provides that shall be for one year from d hereof and from year to year the after as hereinafter provid Further on in the contract this pears: "Either party desirous terminating this agreement m give the other party three mont notice in writing within thirty d after expiration of any contr period as above specified."

This means that the contract tomatically renewed itself from J uary 3, 1907, until the present ti provided you gave no three mont tice in advance of January 3d of y year. That is to say, un- r this contract you should have ven notice on October 3d of any ar of your intention not to con- ue the contract beyond the Janu- y 3d following. If you gave no ch notice the contract was in ce for another year.

I do not find among the corre- ondence any evidence that you ve such a notice as early as Oc- ber 3, 1913, although it appears m their letter to you of Septem- 23d as if you had sent them nething which indicated an in- t to discontinue. Just what that s I of course do not know.

Unless therefore there is some litional evidence that on or about tober 3, 1913, you notified the ndard Fashion Co. of your in- tion to close the contract on Jan- y 3, 1914, you are undoubtedly nd to continue it through the rent year.

Question: Snader & Co., Adams- n, Pa.—Please give us the law arding a general merchant hav- auction. Some say it is not ful, so we concluded to ask you the question.

Answer.—There is no objection a general merchant or any other blished retailer holding an auc- n. He can legally sell his goods t way as well as any other, pro- ed he pays the regular mercantile . The ordinances often passed cities, towns and boroughs regu- ng auctions are practically all inst transient, itinerant auctions. ey do not usually prohibit them, impose a heavy license fee.

Question: Albert Pearson, Min- polis, Minn.—I would like some nt upon the following subject:— Suppose A, an inspector of ghts and measures, has B as a ol to enter the store of C for the pose of buying such eatables as sold by the peck, but must con- n so many pounds. To illustrate we shall use cranberries. A says to B, "go into the store of and buy a quart of cranberries. enters the store and approaches ner one of his clerks or C himself l says "I wish to buy a quart of nberries." He is informed by C his clerk that cranberries are not l by the quart but by the pound. again makes the statement, "I uld like to buy a quart." rough such pleadings he finally uces C or his clerk to sell him quart of cranberries. Mr. C or clerk is haled into court and d $10 for selling cranberries, ng the standard measure with Minnesota seal upon it for full ght. Now it seems that A, through B, is trying to mislead C or his clerk into an illegal transaction. Cranberries must be sold by the pound under the Minnesota laws.

Answer.—While C may have committed a technical offense here, no jury would convict, in my judgment, if the facts were properly presented. The average jury vigorously resents any effort to betray merchants into violating the law. I should not have paid the fine, but would have appealed and stood a trial by jury.

There is another thing: I do not believe C committed any offense against the law anyway. I say this even though Minnesota has a law requiring cranberries to be sold by weight. That law and all such laws are passed to protect consumers, but there is no reason why a consumer who prefers buying cranberries by the quart cannot legally buy them that way if he can get some grocer to sell them to him. Anything else would be a violation of the constitutional right of private contract.

This is exactly what happened here. This inspector—it makes no difference what his motive was—insisted on buying cranberries by the quart, and he was within his constitutional rights when he did. So was C, in my judgment, in selling them that way under such circumstances. I do not believe this case would have lasted five minutes if it had gone to court.

Question: "W," Pennsylvania.—A leased a store and dwelling combined—ten-year lease, expiring April 1st next. Six years after leasing from B the owner (B) has judgment entered against the property.

A was not warned out, and on February 2d B came to A and asked as a favor that he (A) advance the rent (pay it in advance) for the following year from April 1, 1914, to April 1, 1915, which A did and received a receipt in full for same, no new lease being made out, the transaction being done on mutual agreement.

On February 6th B made an assignment. In what position does this put A in regard to the money paid in advance or rent?

Answer.—Bankruptcy usually puts an end to leases, and if this rent had not been paid in advance, A would have had to get out as soon as B was adjudicated a bankrupt. The payment of the rent in advance may or may not make a difference. It is an unusual case. On the whole, I am inclined to believe that the court would not extend the lease beyond the date of bankruptcy, although if I were A, that is what I should work hard to have done. There is enough in his position to warrant putting up a fight. It seems to me, however, that the court may rule that the lease ends with the bankruptcy, but that A can make claim against the bankrupt estate for the rent he has paid in advance. He would then stand on the same footing with other creditors and would receive his pro rata share.

Question: H. A. S., Conn.—Prior to April, 1912, I worked for ten years in the employ of my father in a grocery business. About the year 1906 he opened a branch store and placed me in charge of same, and during my stay in this position I purchased for my own convenience and from my own personal funds a McCaskey register and a desk. About three years ago I together with a brother and another party were taken in as partners with my father, and the business was carried on in this manner until April, 1912, when for various reasons I deemed it advisable to sever my connection with same and then the partnership was dissolved by mutual consent. None of us having put anything into the business, of course we took nothing out when it was dissolved. When I left, for my father's convenience, I did not take my desk and McCaskey register out but left it in the branch store for him to use. A month after this he sold out the branch store to my brother and I still left the fixtures there, my brother knowing that they belonged to me as well as the third party who was in the partnership besides my father. This I know, as he urged me to take them out as they belonged to me and also because he wished to create friction in the family. In the course of time my brother got into trouble and his store was attached and sold out and this party mentioned above bought the building and fixtures. Now what I want to know is, have I any claim that would hold for my desk and McCaskey register? Ordinarily I would not bother about it, but the party who bought took undue advantage of his knowledge of my brother's affairs and is bragging about the bargain he got.

Answer.—Ordinarily, there would be no question as to your right to claim the desk and the register. Up until the sheriff's sale, your right to claim them was complete, as everybody who had possession of them knew that they were yours, and that you merely permitted them to remain on the premises. Whether the sale robbed you of your right is a question. If you stood by at the sale, or stayed away from the sale, giving no notice, knowing that everything on the premises was to be sold, you cannot claim the goods now if they were bought by a third person in ignorance of the facts. You might, however, have a claim upon the fund that they brought. In this case, however, the desk and the register were bought by a person whom you say knew they were yours. If this is true, you can in my judgment get them back from him, because he took them in full knowledge that the sheriff, or whoever made the sale, had no right to sell. I should advise replevying them at once, for there is enough in the case to warrant going to that small expense.

Here's a New One.

By George, I got into a queer sort of mix-up last week. Seems to me that no sooner is something going on but I bump into it. I didn't have a mite of warning. I started out in the morning to make my calls just the same and the very first place I went to I bumped plumb into this thing. A cousin of my mother's keeps the store and him and I stand some different to one another than me and my ordinary customers. Maybe that had something to do with it.

Nobody told me to keep out of the private office so I went right back, same as I've always done, and pushed right in. There was the boss, and one of his clerks that I've seen around the store, and a preacher. The preacher was laying down the law when I butted in.

I begged their pardon and started to sneak out when Cousin Ben called me back.

"Here, we need you, come in." I went in, and he introduced me to the preacher. First I got the story. Here it is:—

That clerk was only 22 years old. He was getting $12 a week. A year ago he got married when he was only getting $11 a week. Nobody knew he was going to do it until after he did it, so nobody could put him wise to the eight different kinds of hell that come when the average fellow gets married on $11 a week.

The boss took pity on him and raised him to $12, though he really, the boss told me afterward, wasn't worth much over $9 or $10.

But $12 didn't buy him a house on Easy street, believe me.

Well, it happened. His wife, who was only eighteen, and didn't know anything, went and had twins as soon as she conveniently could after they got married. Wasn't satisfied with one, understand—had to have a couple. She had a bad time with 'em, had to have a doctor for two or three months, and a specialist, and an operation, and twice as many duds as they had counted on.

All out of $12 a week!

Well, the poor boy stole over $200 from Cousin Ben before they got it on him. This confab was to decide what to do with him. The dominie was the preacher at his mother's church, come in to help out. The mother had a little pension, and she was willing to give some of it up if her boy could be kept out of jail.

Ain't that a happy story of a young married life?

Now what the preacher was saying when I got in was that no man had any right to pay a married man that worked for him as little as $12 a week. Blaming the whole thing on Cousin Ben!

"What do you think of that proposition?" Cousin Ben asked me.

"Nothing to it," I said. "Suppose he ain't worth any more?"

"It makes no difference," said the preacher, "he can't keep a wife, let alone children on that, and it's a crime to expect him to."

"But I didn't make him get a wife and children, did I?" said Cousin Ben.

"Every man has a right to a wife and children," said the preacher.

"Not on your life!" I said, "not if he can't support 'em he ain't."

"Very well," said the preacher, "you can't convince me that an able-bodied man with a family to support, shouldn't be paid a man's wages. There ought to be a minimum wage, no matter what the business is. No man ought to get less than $15 a week."

"I couldn't afford to pay all my clerks that much without getting more for my goods," said Cousin Ben. "Would you as a consumer pay more? Why you complain now of the prices I charge you for sc things."

The preacher had no straig away come-back for that. He c said:—

"It's all wrong. There's a form needed somewhere."

Would he pay more for his st Not so's you could notice it, if any good sizing people up. H be the first to kick and whine fc discount because he's a preac I believe grocery clerks get little money. Some of 'em ge darned sight too little. Why know clerks over forty years that have been in the same job twenty years that are only gett $10. And I could raise an army enough to lick England with f them that ain't getting over $1:

What's the answer? That's they're worth! If they was w more they could go out and ge couldn't they? How you going get around that? They know t ain't worth any more and the willing to work for that. An they ain't willing to work for there's a big bunch waiting tha

What can anybody do about Preachers can't do anything, take a gamble on that. Neither I do anything, but I can tell what would do it. If clerks get so blamed scarce that the mand for 'em is more than the ply, then clerks'll be worth n than $10 and $12 a week. Un stand, when I say they ain't w any more than that to-day I d mean their work ain't worth more. I mean they ain't w more because plenty of 'em ca got for that—more than anyl wants. And a thing is only w what it'll bring in the market. A that right?

Two Washington's Birthday Trims

Two neat and attractive Washington's Birthday windows are illustrated below. It pays to take advantage of a holiday.

No. 1.

The cherry tree trim is arranged in the following manner. First cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. In the centre in front place a sign card with lettering as in illustration. Have a special price on all your cherries that you advertise for a day or two. At each side, on paper napkins, place a dish containing some pitted cherries. Back of them place a semicircle of cherry preserve and cherries in maraschino. Now get a strong, thick branch of a cherry tree, trim it down to look like a small tree, and about a foot from the bottom of the trunk chop and break it. Cover the small twigs with artificial leaves and cherries. Place the tree in the centre of the window at the rear and nail the trunk at the bottom of the window. Place a toy hatchet on the top of the stump by a good blow to make it stick in the wood. At each side build a pyramid of cherries in cans. Make a background at the rear with twisted strips of red, white and blue crepe paper.

The flag design is arranged as follows. Make a slant of board from the rear of the window towards the front, within fourteen o sixteen inches of the glass, leaving this much flat. The slant shoul be about twelve inches high at the rear. Cover it all with white crep paper. On the bottom along the front place napkins on which displa oranges, apples, lemons, grapefruit, etc. Now make the flag in propor tion to the slant on which it is displayed. Cut some pasteboard i long strips about one inch wide and cover them with red crepe paper Place fourteen strips evenly apart to make the stripes, pinning them fas to the slant to form hollow stripes. Fill seven of them with cranberrie and six with coarse granulated sugar. Make the square of blue with some California grapes. Make the stick of the flag with stick cinnamon Place a little branch of artificial cherries and leaves in each corne of the slant. Make the background of twisted strips of red, white and blue crepe paper, as in illustration.

Written for the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Former Easterner, Now Living in California, Says Grocery Business There Has Its Drawbacks, Too

Gossippy Trade Letter from J. E. Witherspoon, an Occasional Contributor. Australian Meat Now on Regular Sale in California. A Glance at the Retail Grocery Business on the Coast, Its Good and Bad Points.

The latest thing in the retail trade in this town is the opening of a market advertising Australian meat at reduced price and talking quality. We are nearly 100 miles from San Francisco and if the perishable food products, such as fresh meat and butter, can compete with home products for several hundred miles from the port of entry, it has a tremendous significance to our commerce.

The coast country has been so extensively advertised that Eastern people think of it as the real estate man advertised it, "If I owned a place beyond the clouds and California, I would rent it out and live in California." I would not advise such a policy. The grocer here has to carry a more varied stock, comprising feed, bottled liquors and green goods. Owing to the presence of green goods for a much longer season, the sale of canned goods is not quite so heavy as in the East.

The temperance sentiment is decreasing the liquor sales.

Monthly payments are the rule, and deliveries have to be made over a large territory. Gas power is coming into use.

There is more room for development and expansion in the north than in the south. A grocer who is choked to death by cut price competition in the East might do well if he had capital and knew he was getting a good location in a growing community in the West. But if he came blindfolded and short of capital, taking chances on getting a good location, or thinks he will get into a town where there are no other grocers, I advise him to think the matter over again.

There is much speculation as to the influx of immigration that the Panama Canal will cause, and the effects of the 1915 Exposition.

The mining trade is profitable, or would be if you could keep store in an aeroplane and be the first grocer at a new strike and the first to leave after the boom had reached its climax.

In closing I might say there is nothing on the Pacific coast, or anywhere in America, for that matter, that equals the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" in trade journalism. There is only one "Stroller" in America.

This Country Merchant Used Motor Deliver to Give His Patrons City Service

Firm of Retailers in Small Ohio Village Delivers to Custome Within Four Miles and Thus Keeps Them from Trading Large Cities or Buying of Mail Order Houses. Expen Seems Small.

The last two years I have been watching a grocery firm who has adopted an automobile delivery in order to render city service to its patrons. This firm is located thirty-five miles from Cleveland and three miles from a village. During the summer months a great many city people from nearby cities locate within four miles of this store along the borders of Lake Erie. Under the present system of parcels post most of the inhabitants could secure their provisions through the parcels post delivery, but this firm, being awake to the situation, put into service an automobile delivery system.

The firm is Corlett Brothers, North Madison, Ohio. In conversation with them, I find that not only has the service been satisfactory to their trade, but it has been exceptionally profitable to the firm. Their own words to me are as follows:—

Our use of auto as a delivery car is confined mostly to the summer or lake trade. We deliver to fou miles of lake front, and as we ar situated about midway between th east and west extremeties of thi colony, you see we are two mile from each end, making the tri from and return to the store fou miles. Where Is Your Contest Paper?

Not as many papers have been received in the current contest, up to this time, as usual. Therefore, the chance of getting a prize to those who do compete is better. Will you not take part in this most interesting discussion? This month's subject is:—

4—If it (an unprofitable nationally advertised article) should not be thrown out of stock, how far should selling such unprofitable articles go? In other words, how many such unprofitable articles can a retailer afford to sell and charge the loss to service?

It is a tremendously important thing to know how much drain like this a retail business can stand. Let us have your views. The following prizes will be awarded for the best papers:—

For the Best	:	$7.50
For the Second Best	:	5.00
For the Third Best	:	2.50

The Read Tea Test Again in Bitter Controversy. Olive and Other Food Oils Will Have Lower Tariff. Merchants' Association Will Aid Fixed Price Movement in Washington. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, N. Y.,
February 19, 1914.

One of the important events of the week in the trade was the renewal of litigation over the Read test for teas. When Carter, Macy & Co. lost their suit, last year, it was generally supposed that the fight was over and that the test had become a fixture. Now, the same importers bring a new suit and start it in a different way. The former case went originally before the Tea Board of the Board of United States General Appraisers, which is affiliated with the Treasury Department.

The new suit is brought in the United States District Court, which is, of course, entirely independent of the Treasury Department. The suit concerns a quantity of teas rejected by the Customs authorities at San Francisco. The usual protest was filed with the Tea Board in this city. The importers have, however, applied to the court for an injunction prohibiting the Board from using the Read test in making its re-examination of the teas.

The rejected teas include 44 cases of extra fine young Hyson teas which arrived January 5th last. It is said that these teas are of much higher grade than the average. The examiners applied the Read test and found minute particles of coloring matter. The teas were accordingly rejected January 13th.

The application of the importers for an injunction is to be heard in court to-morrow. The importers repeat the claims which they made a year ago with some new allegations. It is claimed that the Read test is not a test recognized in the trade; that it is a mechanical and not a chemical test. The importers claim that, under the law, teas cannot be rejected merely because of the presence of coloring or facing material without regard to the total amount of impurities in any shipment of teas is greater or less than the standard established by law.

It is further claimed that the Read test does not reveal the nature of the coloring matter, that it does not show whether the coloring is in the nature of harmless and insoluble sand or, on the other hand, is filthy organic matter.

Affidavits from chemists and others accompany the application for an injunction.

The government will defend the Read test by claiming that it is merely a preliminary step in the chemical analysis that may be made when it is deemed necessary.

It is said in the trade, where the suit is the cause of much discussion, that the use of the Read test has worked out in a way that is unfavorable to the importers of China teas and so is helpful to the importers of Japanese teas. Naturally, it is said, the importers of Japanese teas are pleased with results as they stand and will be glad to see the Read test sustained and continued.

On the other hand, many local importers would rejoice if the test were abolished and their sympathy is with the firm bringing this suit.

Olive oil and several other food products will have the benefit of a lower customs duty as the result of a protest made against higher rates by S. S. Mack, of Austin, Nichols & Co. Importers of these various products are greatly pleased with the success of Mr. Mack's work.

Among the products benefited by the lower duty, besides olive oil, are oil of lemons, oil of oranges, peanut oil, fish oils an dother rendered, expressed, distilled and essential oils, when they are natural and uncompounded oils.

Mr. Mack made the fight over olive oil. It has a specific duty provided in Schedule A. But early last month the Treasury Department issued a letter to collectors, instructing them to apply paragraph 17 to some articles in Schedule A. Accordingly these various oils have since been assessed at a high rate, that is 20 per cent. ad valorem, when imported in packages of 2½ pounds or less.

A number of the importers cooperated with Mr. Mack in bringing the matter to the attention of the authorities at Washington. He made a trip to the capital with B. A. Levett as counsel and they had a conference with Assistant Secretary Hamlin, of the Treasury Department.

Mr. Hamlin suggested that the counsel file a brief on the subject and that was done. In the brief the counsel set forth that paragraph 17 is intended to apply to chemical and medicinal compounds and that olive oil should not be so classified.

The department this week sent out a letter reversing its former ruling as to olive oil and the other oils mentioned, which will accordingly be assessed after this at the lower duty. The olive oil importers are especially pleased with the result as they were largely instrumental in getting the lower specific duty imposed in the tariff act and the results of their labors at the time of the passing of the law would have been nullified if the department had insisted upon changing the classification.

A report has been received here from W. Weddel & Co., Ltd., of London, in which the world's meat conditions are discussed. The English company says that the most important happening of the year was the opening of the markets in the United States to chilled and frozen meat from South America, Australia and New Zealand.

It is pointed out that Great Britain, which formerly obtained a large part of its beef from this country, must now go elsewhere and, in fact, must compete with the United States in buying beef from other parts of the world. Figures are given to show that the exports of beef from the United States to Great Britain have practically come to an end, having dropped from large totals in former years to a small amount in the last year.

The prospects of getting sufficient supplies from other parts of the world are discussed. Suspicion is expressed as to the supposed efforts of American packers to obtain control of various markets for supplies.

A movement has been started in the New York Coffee Exchange to readjust its methods so as to bring it into closer relations with the trade as a whole. M. R. Mayer is especially active in advocatin changes.

Mr. Mayer says that as the vo ume of business in Santos coffe is now three and a half times a large as that of Rio, delivery o Exchange contracts should be o the basis of a Santos instead of Rio coffee. The trading is now o the basis of Rio 7s and it is pro posed to change to a basis of San tos 4s.

Thirty years ago, it is sai nearly all of the coffee shipped t this country from South Americ was Rio and so the present bas was established. Since then, it claimed, there has been a grea change on the part of the public i demanding Santos coffees, large in preference to Rio, and so th sales of Santos coffees have bee steadily increasing.

ore About Its Advantage and a Case Where it Was Done. The Experience of Ernest W. Miller, of Hagerstown, Md., With a Food Show.

This journal has persistently ached to the retail merchants o read it, the importance of get- g as much local publicity as they . Keeping themselves and ir stores in the public eye. ere are local retailers whose nes, either in a business or a ial way, are never mentioned in ir local papers from one year's to another, except perhaps in ir own advertisements, for ich they pay. There are others ose names, or the names of ose family, can be found several es a month, often by the deliber- intent of the merchant himself. s publicity must pay, judging by way in which thousands of suc- sful men work to get it.

The "Modern Merchant and cery World" has been sent by nest W. Miller, a retail dealer of gerstown, Md., two exhibits ch show how these publicity emes can be worked, if a mer- nt is enterprising. Several ks ago Mr. Miller sent this in- tion to a large list of towns- ple, not only his customers, but nany others:—

turday, fifteenth, all day and evening, corner Antietam and Potomac streets,
Hagerstown, Md.

This was handsomely printed in l English type on heavy cream e paper, and was calculated to ate an impression.

The other exhibit is the story ich the local paper gave him on food show. It had a regular s display head and filled more than half a column. Here it is much reduced in size:—

THE PURE FOOD SHOW ATTRACTS

Many Visit Store Of Ernest W. Miller Yesterday Afternoon

DECORATIONS ARE ELABORATE

This Is Also Formal Reopening of Store, Which Has Undergone Extensive Improvements Recently—Event Continues Today.

Between the hours of 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon and 10 o'clock last night several thousand men, women and children visited the store of Ernest W Miller, corner of Potomac and Antietam streets. The reason for this vast crowd was the fact that a Pure Food Show, something never before held in this city, was in progress.

The idea of having such a grand opening was conceived by Mr. Miller some time ago, but it required considerable hard work and careful planning to make the undertaking an actuality.

As soon as one enters the store he can plainly see that Mr. Miller has spared neither time nor expenses. The sight that greets one's eye is pleasant and satisfying. "Sanitary methods" is the keynote. A score or more of clerks, a number of whom are ladies all neatly attired in snowwhite uniforms, are on hand to serve the trade. The storeroom is magnificently decorated with palms, ferns and cut flowers, the work having been done by H. E. Bester, florist.

Of the seven exhibits it is hard to tell which is the best or most attractive. First comes Armour & Company's display of products, including Armour's pork and beans, bouillon cubes and Star ham, in charge of W. I Shores, the local representative, assisted by O G Brooks, of Washington. Next down the line is the exhibit of Caskey's Tip Top Bread in charge of C. E. Linebaugh, manager of the local factory, and his wife. The real "Tip Top Boy"—C. E. Linebaugh, Jr.—attracts a great deal of attention. At this booth splendid sandwiches made of Tip Top Bread and Armour's Star Ham are waiting for the hungry. Mr. Linebaugh will be glad to demonstrate for any grocer in Hagerstown the Caskey products. Mrs. A. L. Clagett, this city, is in charge of the coffee exhibit of Rogs W. Weir & Company, New York. Delicious samples are cheerfully given to anyone. F. S. Smoot, representing Marsey & Company, brokers in the First National Bank, shows the products of the Bordon Company, including Eagle Condensed and Peerless Evaporated Milk. Miss Marie Leddy, Baltimore, is demonstrating the Vori extracts. A. C. Formell, local representative and sales manager of the National Biscuit Company shows a complete line of cakes and crackers. George N. Wolf, this city, is in charge of the Pillsbury flour exhibit.

Mr. Miller was presented with a beautiful bouquet of chrysanthemums by W. C. Conley, of the National Cash Register Company.

The regular force of clerks numbers eight. Eight extra clerks have been secured, who with the ten demonstrators, make a total of twenty-six. The extra ladies are Miss Carrie Jones, Miss Louise Zellers and Mrs. R. E. Miers. The Pure Food Show and exhibits will continue today.

From 8 o'clock until closing time last night an orchestra in charge of Prof. Cope, of the Academy of Music, rendered music.

The store of Mr. Miller has recently been enlarged and improved and is now one of the most attractive and up-to-date in the city.

The writer does not know, but he would willingly make a small wager that Mr. Miller paid nothing directly for this most valuable advertisement. He is probably shrewd enough to keep friends with the publisher, to advertise more or less with him, and to give him his printing. It is very easy indeed to get this sort of publicity out of one's local newspapers if it is gone after intelligently, and as advertising, it is worth more—as general publicity—than any display advertising that can be done.

WESTFIELD, N. Y.

WITH THE EDITOR

One reason for the high cost of living is the lack of intelligent buying on the part of consumers. Take as an example the relative market conditions of No. 2 and No. 3 tomatoes. The present price of No. 2 tomatoes, the cans containing 20 ounces, is 55 cents per dozen in large lots. The average retail selling price of No. 2 tomatoes is 7 cents a can.

Another Proof of Consumers' Foolish Methods of Buying.

No. 3 tomatoes, weighing 32 ounces, are ruling at 70 cents a dozen in large lots, and the average retail selling price is 10 cents. The consumer can choose—20 ounces for 7 cents, or 32 ounces for 10 cents. Sixty per cent. more meat for 43 per cent. more money. Yet they are buying so many 2s that the market is advancing; it was only 50 cents a short time ago. No. 3s are much less active than No. 2s, though representing much the better value.

Why is it?

Possibly because consumers do not stop to figure this out, and no grocer takes the trouble to tell them about it. Possibly from the falsely economical idea that they are saving money when they spend only 7 cents instead of 10 cents, regardless of the relative quantities which the two sums buy. Whatever the specific reason, it means lack of intelligence on the part of the very consumers who inveigh against the middleman.

There is a concerted attack upon the "bargain," which is being denounced by a number of people, mostly those with an axe to grind, as a snare and a delusion. Two rather large shots were fired at the bargain during the week. This one by Secretary M. L. Corey, of the National Retail Hardware Association:—

The War on Bargains and Its Probable Result.

> I have seen screen wire advertised in windows of your own city for less than cost and when I wished to buy they had only a few rolls of old and unsalable sizes.
> I have seen overcoats at big bargains, but they did not have the size wanted, and the whole aim was to sell something else.
> I have seen a long line of waiting customers trying to buy some advertised specialty at cut prices in your city stores, with only one clerk to wait on them, and each transaction must be completed before another would be attempted.
> Why enumerate? Such things and worse are being done every day in nearly every town and city in the land. They are dishonest, deceiving and business degrading.
> There may be a dividing line between "attention getters" and "baits," but the consumer never knows. Our profits are right now a football for the price cutter and dishonest advertiser, and the result is causing so much injury to the country town merchant that we welcome price maintenance, honest window displays and truthful advertising as moves in the right direction.

Of course Mr. Corey has in a sense an axe to grind in what he says, for there is a strong money reason why he and those whom he represents should oppose the sale of hardware at cut prices. Here comes, however, a consumer who slams even harder at the bargain than Mr. Corey does. Mrs. Christine Frederick, a Philadelphia housewife and writer on household economics, told the following to the House Judiciary Committee at Washington last Wednesday:—

> I do believe there does exist such an animal as a "genuine bargain." On one occasion I crowded around a bargain counter, had my plexis torus twisted out of shape, suffered a disclocation of my dorsal humberis, wrecked by best hat, tore out the armhole of a good waist and got three yards and one-half of genuine Valenciennes lace, for which I only paid 78 cents. That was five years ago. And, like the famous Pears' Soap tramp, I have bought no other since then. Therefore, I repeat, that in spite of their rarity, there are, however, legitimate bargains, which fall generally into these two classes:—
> Seasonable goods which must be moved off the shelves to make room for goods of the incoming season, such as we will soon have in winter underwear and clothing to make room for spring goods.
> Clearing out of limited amount of merchandise on special occasions because of special trade conditions, but only when offered by a merchant whose assertions about such goods have been substantiated from past and permanent experience.
> But "bargains" in these classes of goods, I beg to have you note, deal with merchandise which is unnamed and for whose quality I have to take the word of the dealer only, in absence of any trade mark or other guarantee. Frankly, I suspect all such merchandise on general principles.
> When I hear assertions that price cutting is social service, I know only too well from experience that the real object is to have me notice the so-called $30 suit which is marked down to $13.98. Price cutting is to such people a question of which reputation to attack and how much they can afford to lose to get me into the store at all. They have figured out laws of averages showing that merely my presence in the store is worth a definite sum in cash, in anticipation of what else I may be induced to buy—what other lure I may fall for.

When a consumer attacks the bargain it means far more than when a tradesman does it, because one criticism is disinterested against interest, in fact—while the other is keenly self-interested. The average consumer, however, is not opposed to bargains, and is always willing to be stung by one. She—it is usually a "she"—will listen half-heartedly to your talk about frauds, and lures to get her in the store, and the disorganizing of business, and so on, and may agree with all you say. But the minute somebody advertises bargains again her head is up, her eyes glistening and her nostrils inflated with the smell of the battle. It is the chance "getting something for nothing" for a new dress. Where one consumer like Mrs. Frederick will discriminate, ten thousand will pore over the bargain advertisements with watering mouths, always hopeful, always willing to make new experiments.

It is a pity that the enemies of the bargain cannot put more logic into their arguments. One favorite argument is this: "When somebody advertises an Ingersoll watch for 68 cents, he is deliberately losing money, and his only object is to get you in his store so he can sell you something else at an exorbitant profit." A consumer with even a spoonful of sense will immediately answer: "But suppose I don't buy the something else. Suppose I merely buy the Ingersoll watch for 68 cents—have I not bought a bargain? Where have I been deceived or defrauded?" As a matter of fact in such a case she has not been deceived or defrauded at all. She has bought a bargain—a piece of standard merchandise at probably less than it cost to make. That the business of the manufacturer, and of other retailers, is disorganized

Our Change in Name

For some time the publishers of this journal have realized that the name, "Grocery World and General Merchant," was too restricted to properly describe the real scope of the paper. Up to five years ago the name was "Grocery World." At that time it was expanded by the addition of "and General Merchant," and that satisfied us for a time; but the realization has become very pressing that even the expanded title is too narrow. We therefore adopt the name, "MODERN MERCHANT AND GROCERY WORLD," which fits the paper, so far as any name can, to go to any retail dealer, no matter what his line. At the same time, we retain, as a part of the title, "Grocery World," which has become an extremely valuable asset during the twenty-eight years of its continuous use.

The reason why the former names were too narrow is that the paper is read by many merchants other than grocers and general storekeepers, and can be read by more. Much of its present reading matter is as vital to a coal dealer as to a grocer, and by the addition of new departments touching individual lines, any retail or wholesale merchant will be able to find something in it which will pay him to read.

To the grocer there will be no change in the paper which will make it less valuable to him. In addition to the same character of reading matter which he has grown to expect in it, there will simply be some new departments, which he need not read if they do not interest him.

THE PUBLISHERS.

l upset, is all nothing to her. hat does she care for that? This is the fatal weakness of all npaigns whose object is to in- :e consumers to let bargains ne.

Lack of imagination is responsi- for many business failures.

Merchants Had ore Imagination They Would ke More Money.

There are grocers struggling along under adverse conditions, barely king a living, no future before m, never free from anxiety, who ld rescue themselves in six nths by putting in dry goods, or 5-and-10-cent department or nething else foreign to groceries. eir neighborhoods are ripe for it, ir stores would accommodate it. portunity stands beside them uting in their ears, but they do hear.

There are dry goods dealers who doing an indifferent business, ose neighborhoods are greatly in d of a shoe store. They could a shoe department without the htest difficulty, and with a small estment, could make money n the jump. Do they do it? Their minds have run in the goods groove so long that the idea has never even occurred to them that they could go outside. Without walls or ceiling they are still prisoners.

There is nothing illegal, or immoral, or undignified in a grocer putting in harness, if he can make money out of it. And if he isn't making what he ought to make out of groceries, but probably could make it out of harness, how utterly foolish not to do it!

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

VI.—What Coffee Blends a Grocer Should Roast for Himself.

By William B. Harris.

The selection of the coffee which the dealer is to roast and from which he is to make up his blends is the vital point in the whole proceedings and correct judgment as to his source of supplies means the success or failure of the business.

Many dealers make the mistake of writing haphazard for samples, which they know nothing about and cannot judge accurately when received. If, for example, he secures three or four samples of Santos, the first thing considered is price, with the result that usually the best coffee is not the one selected.

The dealer should first determine the number of brands of coffee he will carry and the amount of profit he expects to make on each brand.

Now comes the all important matter of placing an order for green coffees. It will be necessary for the dealer to depend upon some jobber or wholesale dealer to make a selection of coffees and to instruct him as to his blends. The person that will do this to the best advantage will be a man thoroughly familiar with both the green and roast end of the business and one who understands thoroughly the cupping and blending of coffees. The dealer's first inquiry, therefore, should be not as to the coffees he expects to buy, but as to the standing of the concern from which his supplies are to be secured, and whether their shipments will turn out uniform as to cup merit and character.

In almost any large city concerns of this description are to be found. The best plan would be to select a company doing a green and also a roast coffee business. The grocer will not only need his coffees selected on the green coffee basis as to grade, but must also be assured that the cof-

17—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because, generally speaking, they are easier to sell at a profit than similar merchandise which is unknown

¶ If you feel that you have to sell a nationally advertised product at a cut price because your competitors do, then you would feel that you had to sell a non-nationally advertised product at a cut price, if some competitor got hold of that—as he is any time likely to do—and cut its price.

¶ We earnestly submit to your intelligence that no merchant is compelled to sell anything at a cut price. Getting a fair return for his merchandise is simply one of the fundamental business problems; it involves salesmanship; sometimes it involves courage. But it can be done and is being done by thousands of successful men to-day. Nationally advertised merchandise whose quality is tested and known, is always easier to sell at a profit, than merchandise whose quality is not known.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

fees are good roasters. He will likewise need information as to cupping and blending, which it will be impossible for him to get from a strictly green coffee house.

It would also be well to ascertain whether or not the jobber or wholesale dealer is in favor of the retail grocer doing his own roasting. If not, communicate with some other concern, for although the first may be above reproach, they would not take sufficient interest in the business to give the necessary care to the selection of the green coffees. Having found a jobber or wholesale dealer who will admit that the small roasting outfit is a good business proposition and who is willing to assist the grocer in building up his coffee department, stick to him as long as the shipments are uniform and you have no reason to believe that prices are out of the way. There is nothing worse for this line of business than continual changing from one house to another on account of a concession in price. This is an old dodge and is a cheap way of attempting to get business. A half cent a pound sometimes looks pretty big, but every seller is bound to make a profit in some way or other, and when he attempts to get trade by cutting prices he must in the long run take it out of the value of the merchandise shipped.

It should not be inferred from the above that the dealer should refuse to consider samples from other houses, as this is a good method of checking the shipments he is receiving.

When testing samples the grocer should do this work quietly by himself. If samples are brought in by any broker or salesman he should insist that they be left for him to consider later, for with the salesman present calling attention to a particular line of samples the mind of the buyer is confused and the samples from outside do not get equal consideration.

Having determined upon the number of coffees he will require for his various blends and the prices that he can afford to pay for such coffees, he should secure the best merchandise possible for his purpose. When these grades of green coffees have been established they should be kept always uniform, and the question of a half cent should never influence the dealer to run in an inferior coffee with the idea that it will not make any difference to his customers. A change to a lower grade may not be noticed at once, but will certainly tell in time on the volume of his business. It is a very good plan for the grocer to keep types about a pound each of the green coffees that he decides to use and also of any lots that he may later receive that seem to him to be particularly desirable. Such samples can then be used as types to be compared with the shipments as they come forward and also with any samples that may be offered from time to time. A small portion of these types can be roasted occasionally and compared with roasts from his regular stock so as to make certain that the character of his various coffees is running uniform. As the types are thereby depleted they can be made up again from subsequent shipments.

There is only one way for the grocer to study his coffees, and that is by continually testing them in the cup. The outfit required for this purpose is exceedingly simple. It consists of a small pair of balance scales, about a dozen testing cups, a small mill for grinding samples and a kettle for boiling water. These articles are easily obtainable at the cost of a few dollars, and with such an outfit the dealer can test all samples that come in to him, the coffees that he is roasting and also the blends that he is putting out.

As to Complaints.

What kind of complaints do you get from your coffee customers, if you get any? Of course, the complaints would reveal the deficiencies of the department almost as nothing else would. Perhaps you get no complaints, but customers simply drop away. In that case the deficiency in the department might even be worse. William B. Harris, the author of these articles, will be glad to discuss these points with you, and there is no doubt of his ability to help you. Write him, care this paper.—Ed.

Dear Sir:—Please find out the standing of a farm journal called by the name of "The National Stockman and Farmer," printed in the city of Pittsburg, Pa. New York Governor Also Wants to Destroy Middleman.

Castile, N. Y., Feb. 12, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We have been very much interested in the articles in regard to the effect of parcel post on the retail dealer.

We enclose an article taken from the Rochester "Union and Advertiser" which shows that the retail dealer has got to come up against.

We have also noticed similar articles in which the United States will follow a similar policy.

Yours truly,
Kellogg Bros.

The article enclosed in this letter is a verbatim reproduction of a message sent to the New York Legislature on February 10th by Governor Glynn. It is too long to reproduce in full, but the following observations regarding the middleman will be interesting:—

> Because there has been a decrease in the amount of land under cultivation, New York's food supply has remained practically stationary, while its population has steadily increased; but in addition to this fact the cost of bringing the farmer's products to the consumer's table is greater than ever before.
> For every dollar that the consumer of New York pays for his food the farmer receives but 35 cents; 65 per cent. of every dollar paid for food represents merely the cost of distribution.

With twentieth century facilities hand, New York is still in the venteenth century so far as its stem of marketing food is conrned. The farmer is a manufacrer, but he operates at present ıder a system which would drive ıy other manufacturer into bank-ıptcy.
The farmer now is a manufacrer who buys his raw products at tail and sells the finished products wholesale. Instead of dealing directly as possible with the an to whom he sells his products, turns them over at wholesale ices to commission merchants and rge buyers, or else pays neces-rily extravagant freight rates on nall shipments of food.
So unscientific is the present sysm of food distribution that in me cases after the farmer's prodts have reached the centers of disibution they travel for miles in a undabout fashion where they ıould properly go but a stone's row.
In many cases farmers' products
e shipped to some distant center ly to return to a neighboring vilge in a few days.
In this transaction there is always loss of quality and the extra ex-nse of transportation and profit hich the ultimate consumer must y.
The reason for these disturbing cts is apparent. The farmer at esent deals as an individual; be-use his time is taken up with oduction he has no time or chance attend to the numerous phases distribution. And so long as this true, the middleman is not to ame, because he merely takes con-tions as he finds them.
I do not believe there is any essing need for new legislation in e matter. New York already has on its statute books laws which, properly applied, would stop the esent waste and mismanagement.
In the co-operative marketing
w of last year and the credit union w, the State has the means of abling the farmer to buy at olesale and sell at retail. A few rming communities have already ken advantage of these laws and scovered that they met the farms' problems, but through the State nerally, because of indifference d a failure to appreciate what these laws mean, there has been failure to take advantage of them.

What New York most needs is not legislation, but organization.

The farmer either has no time to form co-operative societies himself or he lacks the necessary initiative and must be assisted by capable organizers sent out by the State.

In the few instances where farming communities in New York have organized co-operative societies under the present laws, the results have been most satisfactory.

A co-operative association in the Hudson valley, incorporated something over a year ago, has actually reduced the prices of many farming supplies 100 per cent. It was able to reduce the price of oats, for instance, from 60 cents a bushel to 38 cents for its members; it was able to reduce the price of lime and sulphur solution from $9 to $5 a barrel, and it is able, with profit to market the produce of its members at 3 per cent. of the gross price.

A co-operative company organized last year in one of our large industrial cities has applied the benefits of the law to the consumers. It has for its directors men who work in the shops of the city during the day and at night are directors and store clerks in the company's co-operative store. They have been able to make a reduction of 18 per cent. in the price of necessities of their members, and at the same time have paid their stockholders 6 per cent., the limit permitted in a co-operative company.

From these facts it would appear that further legislation is unnecessary, but that what the State needs is a campaign of organization which will bring to every farming community in the State the benefits which at present only a few have had the forethought to seize.

The Legislature should secure for the State the services of men who will make it their sole duty to go through the State explaining these co-operative laws and assuming the responsibility for creating and organizing credit unions and co-operative marketing societies.

These men should make it their business to organize markets and shipping stations under the control of local co-operative marketing associations. One large receiving center in cities and towns of medium size will answer all the purposes of a packing, grading, shipping and marketing station.

Here the produce will be delivered by the neighboring farmer and credited to his account. The goods will then be graded, packed and labeled. Pains will be taken to supply first of all the demands of the local town. The balance can then be shipped in carload lots to the centers of best demand. One central station equipped with cold storage facilities can accommodate the surplus products of several smaller stations.

These various associations throughout the State can organize a selling agency in the city of New York which will keep itself advised on the conditions of domestic and foreign markets and be in a position to direct the shipments to centers where the demand is strongest and where the best prices prevail.

Representatives of the Merchants' Association of New York have joined with those from other organizations of late in presenting arguments before committees at Washington on questions of fixed prices and price discrimination. It is believed in some quarters that excellent progress has been made in bringing about a more favorable attitude on the part of legislators and the public to the principle of fixed prices on specialties. Strong arguments have been presented at Washington in favor of giving to manufacturers the right to fix the resale price of their products when such products are in the nature of specialties which are in competition with other specialties or staples so that there is no monopoly.

It has been emphasized in these arguments that it is necessary to give manufacturers this right in order to preserve free and fair competition. It has been argued that competition needs regulation in order to preserve it from falling into monopoly. The speakers have argued that unrestricted competition may have been all right in earlier days, but with the changed conditions of commerce in the present days it tends toward monopoly.

East Stroudsburg, Pa., Jan. 15, 1914.
Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find a copy of my Christmas ad. in one of our local papers.

I am a subscriber to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" and have been reading your criticism of ads. and would like you to publish your opinion of this one.

Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain,

CHAS. W. SMILEY.

The advertisement which Mr. Smiley sent was his Christmas advertisement. It filled the upper half page in his local paper on Thursday, December 18th, just one week before Christmas. The advertisement is going to be a little large to get into the space I shall have to reduce it to, but I will do the best I can. The original measured 9½ x 15 inches and here is the photographic reproduction:—

Frankly, I do not consider this good advertising. To be sure, its size has some advertising value. People who read the paper will be sure to see this half page, and this will remind them of the Smiley store. Undoubtedly this has a value, but it is very intangible and indirect. In a space like this, Mr. Smiley could have gotten all the benefit of the large size of his advertisement, and in addition to that, he could have gotten something more direct. Perhaps he could have put matter in this space which would have gotten him business. Do you believe, Mr. Smiley, that you were telling the public anything interesting, that they did not know before, when you merely advertised that you sold cranberries and maple syrup? How much business would the big department stores get from their advertising if they simply advertised "we sell dry goods, and clothing, and shoes," and so on? Specific business comes only from specific offers of specific goods. What could Mr. Smiley have advertised in this way? Well, I have no doubt that he has material. For example, if he has made arrangements with some farmer, as many grocers do around Christmas time, to supply fine fat turkeys, he could exploit that. If the nuts he has contracted for are better than they have been for years, he could exploit that. If he has gotten hold of a new blend of coffee that people seem to be saying good things about, he could advertise that. So on through an endless range of possibilities. None of these may fit, but without any doubt, there are plenty of other good ideas that would, if Mr. Smiley would only dig them out of his own business. To get good advertising material, there is nothing better than to sit down sometime when you can have fifteen minutes or half an hour to it, absolutely undisturbed, and ask yourself these questions: Wh should anybody prefer my store t others? What have I got that th others have not? What especial good goods have I that stand ou from the general run? If you ca find any definite answers to thes questions, that is what you ough to advertise.

NOTE.—This department is de voted to the criticism of adverti ing matter sent in, to the devisin of new advertising ideas fo special occasions, upon reques and to the suggesting of origin advertisements when data is sup plied. All communications sen in for this Department should b addressed to the Editor of Scienc of Advertising. They will b filed in their order and taken u in strict rotation.

Wholesome Salesmanship.—If you don't leave the right impression you aren't a success. Sell goods to-day that will bring more sales to-morrow. That's one of the big modern ideas of business. Let truth prevail. As we said before, know your goods, and describe them as you know them. "Didn't you find those peaches nice as I said they were?" To be able to say that with assurance and look your customer right in the eye is "wholesome salesmanship." The thing applies to the whole line. Never misuse your talking ability. It won't do to let a customer get anything back on you. Morally you are the sufferer. Financially the boss is. If you in your eagernes to make a big sale overstepped yourself, you may have cut out a business of five or six hundred dollars a year. That's just how touchy some women are. Be careful. Practice wholesome salesmanship.

Breakfast Relish

This product is usually called "Minced Ham" by the consumer. It consists of choice, tender pieces of pork, chopped to the proper degree of fineness and stuffed in a linen container. It is smoked just long enough to acquire that pleasant and appetizing flavor which only hickory wood can impart. Weight about five pounds each.

After the bag is removed in the same manner as from our Lunch Roll, the Relish is cut in thin slices, and the only additional preparation necessary for serving is to fry it a few minutes over a hot fire.

This makes it one of the quickest, most economical and at the same time one of the most satisfying and nutritious breakfasts obtainable.

If you are not already using Burk's Breakfast Relish—give it a trial. Like all other "Burk" products—it is the best on the market.

The coffee market is about unchanged for the week. Rio and Santos coffees are very dull and rule unchanged. Milds are in better demand and are steady to firm but without change for the week. Java and Mocha dull and unchanged.

Sugar.

Refined sugar is firmer, though raw sugar is weak, and sales have been made during the week at a shade off. Granulated can still be bought at 4.05, though several of the refiners are asking 4.10. Nobody will now sell granulated at 4 cents, although that will probably be the price after March opens. There is a fair demand for sugar now, and the supply is small. That is the reason for the stiffening.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week, and compound syrup is accordingly unchanged; demand fair. Sugar syrup is dull and unchanged. Molasses fairly active at ruling prices.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are somewhat firmer, and a number of the packers are now holding Maryland 3s at 72½ cents f. o. b. in a large way. Others, however, will still sell at 70 cents, though the tone is undoubtedly strong. The demand is fair only. Future tomatoes dull. Spot and future corn are unchanged and quiet and unchanged in price. Future peas are still being taken somewhat, though probably 75 per cent. of the early business has been done. Spot peas quiet and unchanged. Apples steady to firm and in moderate request. California canned goods unchanged, seasonably quiet in first hands. Small Eastern staple canned goods moving seasonably at unchanged prices. Spinach is getting very scarce, but the price has not advanced.

Fish.

No change has occurred in fish during the week. Mackerel of all grades are dull, though there is some demand all the time; prices steady to firm. Lent is about to open, and some improvement is expected in the demand then. Cod, hake and haddock are all unchanged, market steady, demand fair. Salmon of all grades in fair every day demand; prices unchanged. Sardines, both domestic and foreign, in unchanged position, scarce and high.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged and steady. Peaches still quiet, but the demand should improve from now on; prices on peaches are very attractive. Apricots still very high and dull. Raisins in precisely the condition they have been in for several weeks; price unsettled and light demand. Currants and other dried fruits quiet and unchanged.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are about unchanged on spot, but are about 10 cents per bushel lower to come forward. The demand is fair. Marrows are unchanged with a moderate demand. California limas have advanced another five points, by reason of scarcity. The stock on the coast is said to be far below that of last year, and the outlook is for even higher prices. Green and Scotch peas unchanged and quiet.

Butter.

The demand for fresh butter has improved considerably during the week, and the receipts have cleaned up on arrival. Therefore there has been an advance of 3 cents per pound. Storage butter is dull and unchanged, with a light demand at ruling figures. The market is sensitive, and if there is any falling off in the demand, prices will decline.

Eggs.

The receipts of fresh eggs continue liberal and the supply is increasing as the season advances. The weather is causing some interruptions, however. The consumptive demand is good, considering prices, and the slightest increase in the supply will probably cause a further decline in the market. Storage eggs are cutting almost no figure now; the supply is very light.

Cheese.

The cheese market is firm at present quotations, and stocks are reported light everywhere. The consumptive demand is good and no change seems in sight.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are steady and unchanged for the week. Pickled meats, however, are reported higher in the West, and if this is maintained it may mean higher prices for all smoked meats in the near future. Pure lard is firm at an advance of possibly ¼ cent. The consumptive demand is fair. Compound lard is dull at ¼ cent off. Dried beef in fair demand at unchanged prices. Barreled pork and canned meats are quiet and unchanged.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Imported Fish Specialties.

We are pleased to report a brisk demand for all kinds of herring, and prices for Hollands are stationary—just about the same as they were last week, while prices for Scotch herring are somewhat on a decline, but demand and consumption have increased.

Norway herring continue steady and in fairly good demand.

There has been more inquiry lately for Norway mackerel and stocks here are likely to be cleared when the Lenten demand sets in.

New Jersey Legislature Conside Another Canned Goods Dating

Another canned goods dating has been introduced in the Jersey Legislature, and a hea was given to its opponents Monday at Trenton. Repres tives from New Jersey pac were present and all argued ag the bill on the same ground has always been urged ag canned goods dating bills, viz., no dating is needed because g packed in hermetically sealed do not deteriorate, and a dat the can would simply feed a impression on the part of con ers. The hearing was before Assembly Committee on P Health, and a number of New sey farmers also spoke agains bill. There is reason to be that the bill will be reported an unfavorable recommendatio her than a year before and 16 cent. higher than two years be- e. There was a 70 per cent. in- ase above the average prices for ten-year period beginning in)0. The present prices are said)e higher, on an average, than at time in the last 24 years over ich the inquiry extended.

)f course a few people will con- ıe to draw the inference from h reports that retailers are now king exorbitant profits, but the inary retailer has little difficulty convincing his customers that h an inference is ill-founded and t the public must look elsewhere n to the retail stores for an ex- ıation of high prices.

)ne of the large chain grocery ıpanies has been conducting a ·e in Flatbush for some time on experimental basis to determine t will be a success without a de- ry system. Flatbush is a resi- ce suburb of Brooklyn and it is ıred that the thrifty housewives that section may be educated he habit of carrying home their plies, if attracted by concessions)rices.

'he company's other stores all e delivery systems. This Flat- h store is said to have worked quite a big trade in a short time)ng people who are willing to their own delivering. The prices considerably lower than those the other neighborhood stores— ıt least they seem to be lower— the same grades of goods. A ge part of the business is in ned goods, butter and eggs.

Besides the matter of deliveries, store is on a cash basis, while st of the neighborhood stores in same section do more or less lit business. The chain store, course, claims that the absence bad debts and the saving on de- ries enables it to quote lower es than those of any other res in the same locality.

n the bulletin issued by Royal eker, of the Federal Bureau of bor, recently, the losses of gro- s on bad dets and the increas- cost of deliveries were con- ered in explanation of profits de on the sales of flour. The ter of the bulletin intimated that)cers should give cash customers advantage in prices. The bul- n conveyed the impression that the retailers' profits on flour are higher than is generally supposed by the public. It was stated that the gross margin of profit on a 48 or 49 pound sack of flour is about 20 cents and sometimes 25 or 30 cents when there is a rising market, although it may fall to 15 or 10 cents when there is close competition.

It was also stated that grocers in the large cities are selling less flour and more bread than formerly.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Business in spot coffee continues of a routine character. The recent reaction in options has tended to check buying. Traffic conditions are causing some delay in shipments. The desirable grades of Santos are steady in price on the basis of 12 cents for No. 4s. There is little doing in the poorer grades. Rio 7s are sold at 9⅜ cents. The comparatively high prices of the mild grades checks business so that the trade in these grades is quiet, with prices on spot supplies fairly firm.

Teas of all kinds are quiet and steady. The trade is still awaiting the new standards and generally expects that they will be substantially the same as those of the past year. Attention is also given to the renewal of litigation over the Read test. A considerable part of the wholesale trade, it is known, would like to see the test abolished and other tests substituted. The outcome of the litigation will therefore be regarded as of much importance.

There is a hand-to-mouth demand for rice of the various grades. Brokers report little interest in their offerings, both domestic and foreign. Reports from the South indicate that a steady tone is maintained and the better qualities of Honduras are especially firm.

A fair grinding demand is reported in the spice market. As spot supplies are moderate, prices are quite firm. Little interest is now shown in forward offerings.

Shipments of refined sugar are light because of poor traffic conditions. The demand is quiet, however. The American and Warner are quoting 4.10 cents for standard granulated for prompt shipment, but it is said that some business has been accepted at 4.05 cents. The Federal is quoting the latter figure. Arbuckles are quoting 4 cents for shipment by March 16th. Howells have been out of the market for a few days.

An increased demand for small lots of canned vegetables of various kinds is reported. This seems to indicate that there is a fair consuming demand and that stocks in jobbers' hands are getting low. As a rule, quick deliveries are requested. The demand for cheap peas is especially lively and it is said that the supplies to be had at low prices are getting pretty well cleaned up as a result. Most holders are now asking 72½ to 75 cents for supplies on hand. Buyers who have been shopping for supplies at 65 to 67½ cents have found considerable difficulty in getting peas that are of desirable quality. A better demand for spot standard corn is developing and the tone of the market is consequently stronger. Fancy grades on the spot are getting scarce. Southern tomatoes are firm, on the basis of 70 cents for No. 3 and 50 cents for No. 2, f. o. b. Baltimore, on packer's label. The supplies available for buyers' labels are limited and command about 2½ cents more. The demand is mostly for small lots to fill jobbers' requirements. Local distributors are apparently paying little attention to future canned vegetables. The tendency in this market is to pursue a waiting policy.

There is no urgent demand for canned fruits of any kind, but spot supplies are restricted and prices firm. The supplies in packers' hands are said to be pretty well cleaned up and this adds to the firm tone of the market.

In dried prunes there is a fair spot trade, although the demand is not urgent. The tone of the market is firm, however, as it is on the coast. Large fruit is especially scarce and few packers are able to supply all sizes. The receipt and delivery of goods is slow because of the traffic conditions on the West Side. There is not much buying interest in dried peaches, but as stocks are apparently light, the feeling is steady. Dried apricots are in light supply all around and prices are firm, as the consuming demand is increasing. Raisins are dull, with prices at least nominally steady, as there is no pressure to sell. Currants are quiet.

Canned salmon is slow and steady. A big cargo received this week will be distributed chiefly to interior markets. Sardines are quiet.

Flour is dull, as the mills are firm in their views of values and most of the distributors are buying only for actual requirements. In some quarters it is reported that jobbers are getting a little anxious, however, and are willing to advance their bids somewhat.

High-grade creamery butter is a little firmer. The demand is moderate and arrivals liberal. The fresh creamery extras are selling as a rule at 30½ cents to-day, with some variation almost from day to day. The held butter of the best grade is being offered more freely, and this tends to check any advance in medium grades of fresh creamery. The fresh creamery firsts range from 27 to 30 cents. The best grades of held creamery range from 26 to 29½ cents. Process butter is quiet, with the best grades offered at 21 to 23 cents.

High grades of fresh gathered eggs are a little steadier in tone, with a better clearance of arrivals. The fresh gathered Western extras bring about 31 to 31½ cents. There is a good outlet for firsts at 30 cents when they are well graded, and occasional lots bring a fraction of a cent more. There is a free offering of chilled or frosted goods at 28 to 29½ cents and the accumulation of these eggs has been somewhat reduced. Fancy nearby white eggs from the henneries are in larger supply and are sold at 38 to 39 cents. The best grades of refrigerator eggs are selling at 24 to 26½ cents.

Fred. A. Magill.

Florida pineapples are high. Sales of 24s were made during the week at $4 to $4.25. The demand is quiet.

The Busy Grocery

THE busy grocery is the store where the most careful buying is back of intelligent selling. Having what the customer wants, when she wants it, is the very essence of good merchandising.

National advertising is directing consumers to trade marked goods, because the trade mark identifies worthy products and is an implied guarantee.

Keeping a full variety of National Biscuit Company products, in the famous In-er-seal Trade Mark packages and in the handsome glass front cans, means intelligent buying. Meeting the demand created by National Biscuit Company advertising means intelligent selling.

Dry Goods and Notions

Well-known New York Dry Goods Man Dead.

The death is announced of George E. Armstrong, head of the credit department and secretary of the H. B. Claflin Co., New York, which occurred Monday. He was well and favorably known throughout the trade. The deceased went to New York from Cleveland, Ohio, where he had been in business for himself, in 1877, connecting with the Claflin Co. credit department, and a few years later became its chief, a position he retained until his death, at the advanced age of 84 years. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" regrets to chronicle the demise of so able and highly honored gentleman in all his relations in life.

Worsted and Cotton Dress Goods Market Unusually Favorable for Buyers.

Exceptional values are prevailing in worsted and cotton dress goods and jobbers are showing the greatest values that have been seen in many years. The desire of sellers to move goods out at some price is so manifest in many quarters of the New York market that buyers for retailing are wondering to what extent they should participate in the real bargains that are offered. Good values were quoted in serges, cotton and silk, as well as the staples in all wool and wool and cotton mixtures dress material.

Wash fabrics are being sold in an active way, and printed sheer novelties, such as crepes and ratines, are being bought well by retailers. Goods of the galatea character are being engaged for prompt shipment, while the lighter weight ratines, plaid ratines in loose waves and rice cloths are also proving popular.

Summarizing the weekly review of the Rice-Stix Dry Goods Co., St. Louis, Mo., dealing with wholesale conditions, say this: Good crop prospects and unexcelled weather have a tendency to create strong confidence in the prospect for an excellent spring retail business. Merchants are buying with confidence and are selecting a better grade of merchandise. A great many items in staple cotton goods are in very short supply, and the pronounced scarcity increases daily. Ginghams, particularly fancy dress, are having the usual good call, which is especially true of percales. Merchants are buying freely for a large variety of wash goods, printed and woven tissues, crepes, batistes and corded fabrics.

Indications are for an exclusive silk period in men's neckwear. Novelties in various weaves have been produced, most prominent of which are crepes and crepe failles in an assortment of many colored Persians and printed designs. These scarfs show to the best advantage and are made up in the open and flowing ends and extremely large and conservative shapes. A great demand is noted in crepe windsors of the new plain shades, and bright Scotch plaids.

The same authority states that knit underwear will unquestionably be in short supply throughout the country, as the stock of such goods in the hands of the retailer is low. Among the new features are narrow, straight leg drawers and knickerbockers.

A Chicago epitome of the market states that buyers are coming in large numbers from the South, Southwest, Pacific Coast and Rocky Mountain territories. The merchants from these sections are interested in merchandise for immediate and early spring business and have bought generously in all lines. The few specialties being shown for fall delivery are getting a good reception. Future business in handkerchief lines is running ahead of last season.

Dry Goods Business and the New Banking and Tariff Laws.

Late spring selling promises to keep up the average so far recorded for the new year. It is true that just at present is the filling in season, but when the travelers begin to call upon the trade along about the middle of April retail merchants may be counted upon to buy freely for the fall. This is the view of Frank S. Evans, manager of the wholesale department of Strawbridge & Clothier. Briefly, current business is fair, there is no speculative buying on the part of the handler of merchandise at retail and conditions are normal.

The new banking law, Mr. Evans believes, is excellent, and when it becomes effective will be protective and stimulating. There is too much interference with business by the national legislature, he said, and the continual introduction of bills of this character has a tendency to upset commercial calculations and create a feeling of hesitancy in buying when it comes to the retailers, who are now acting cautiously. The tariff has made no difference whatever in the various lines of dry goods, and, of course, the much-mentioned "ultimate consumer," in political phraseology, will pay no more and no less than before. In fact, Mr. Evans rather caustically observed, that laws have been enacted to lower cost in everything, but this consummation was far from being realized. On the contrary, a good many new taxes were created which would increase rather than diminish the burdens of the general merchant. However, thin crepe effects are being favored by buyers and serges were looking up well, which is more to the point just now, he remarked in conclusion.

Jobbing Firms' Dinner Hears Good Reports.

At the annual dinner of Sullivan & Co., jobbers of hosiery, notions, etc., Philadelphia, to their roadmen and heads of departments, Monday evening, reports of the most optimistic character respecting the general business outlook were made. Fifty of the firm's salesmen were present. The prevailing sentiment, based on contact with retail merchants, was that the country is at the beginning of an era of unusual prosperity. Statistical reports were cited to show that the boom era has arrived.

Ribbon Business Looks Like a Boom. Other Market Information.

Late reports from the primary markets are to the effect that the spring ribbon business is going to be larger than the manufacturers and jobbers can deliver on time for the season. Deliveries from mills are very irregular, as their capacity has been taxed near the limit. Orders now being placed by retailers are being accepted only for delivery late in the season, ar prices show advances on this bu iness on the preferred noveltie The high price of raw silk mak it difficult for ribbon manufactu ers to figure quotations for futu delivery, and some mill agen flatly refuse to accept orders this time.

Wash goods are active wit jobbers, and buyers are beginnin to realize that in dress goods lin unusual opportunities are bein offered to stock on staples tha are safe property to own. Men wear jobbers are finally bein forced to advance the low price at which they started the seaso The mark up in wool and yarn is doing what their fright of fo eign competition did not do.

In hosiery lines the total sale to date are ahead of last yea Goods for the spring trade ar overdue from the mills, owing t the change in prices between no and when the orders were ac cepted. No great impetus in Ge man hosiery business, as wa looked for under the new tarif has materialized. The cashme orders that were expected t swing toward foreign lines ha not swung so far. Certain chea goods, of course, that come unde the 50 per cent. rate, are selling but the volume right through i foreign made lines is not yet im pressive.

A Boot Idea for Retailers in Agricultural Districts.

Army boots—that is, for officer —are manufactured as a special ized product by a Kansas concern who for fully twenty-five years have done the work solely by hand Recently machinery has been in stalled in obedience to the growing demand. Goods of this grade are generally rated as reliable in every respect, knowing the wear they are subjected to, and perhaps here is an lew Styles Now Going Through Factories.

With the manufacturers of Roch- er, N. Y., a well-known shoe nufacturing centre, especially finer and medium grades, the v styles have been determined on and are now going through factories. They will be more ied than ever, the retail mer- nt should note, and many novel- will be offered by jobbers and kers. In women's wear for the , the samples of which are rtly to be shown—patent leather l predominate, with kidney and is heels. That the posted buyer nodels and style variations is al- vs in a position to make the best ctions for stock, is axiomatic.

ew York's Designs for Coming Season.

New York's designs cannot be rlooked by the retail merchant lacing orders for his new stock. metropolitan manufacturers, seconded by the progressive bers, have ruled that cloth tops, either gray or black, preferably former, with patent leather ip, is to be the coming combina- for women's footwear. The and for calf goods has fallen ay for the spring season, but will to the front again in the fall ples.

The "Pure Shoe" Bills.

Evidently the shoe trade, with manufacturers and jobbers at storm center, is perturbed r the proposed so-called "pure e" bills that have been intro- ed in Congress and in several the State Legislatures. Kan- the breeding ground of freak s, has an act of this character t goes into effect April 1st. measure prohibits a mer- nt from selling boots or shoes ess they are stamped officially to the material used in their nufacture. This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants sas" that the "pure shoe" act is a dead letter as it stands.

General retail merchants are concerned in the threatened enactment of such laws, and the facts regarding shoe raw material is being placed before the National and State legislatures at public committee hearings. It is not strange that the lay press—daily and weekly—should criticise manufacturers and dealers for not willingly accepting such destructive legislation. What the average general newspaper writer does not know about questions of this kind would fill a few large volumes, and therefore their attitude reflects their ignorance and the slight capacity of their personal "think tanks," not to mention the superficialty of their mental processes. However, that is another story, and is one of the jokes of the trade newspaper fraternity.

Replying to a recent editorial in one of the most carefully conducted and intelligent dailies of the country, which, when the sober truth of the controversy is considered, bordered on the humorous for its misconceptions—something of a surprise, it must be admitted—A. H. Geuting, secretary of the National Shoe Retailers' Association, wrote in part as follows:—

> The projectors of the "pure shoe" legislation seem to assume that because a shoe is made of all leather it must be a good shoe, and, therefore, the best way to protect the consumer against inferior shoes is to insist that all shoes not made of all leather shall be so labeled. In other words, if a shoe is made of all leather the law guarantees it to be a good shoe.
> Therein lies the fundamental error. An all-leather shoe is not necessarily a good shoe. On the contrary, as poor shoes as have ever been made can be made of all leather; shoes that will fall apart almost the first time they are worn in the wet, yet they will be sold as "Guaranteed solid leather, under the act of ——", etc. At the same time the manufacturer of really good shoes, shoes that do what they are intended to do—give comfort, protection and service to the wearer—will be compelled, at great expense and trouble, to stamp his product with a bill of specifications because he uses certain substitutes for poor leather in parts of the shoe. Bearing in mind that by the use of substitutes in some parts of shoes the manufacturer is enabled to use better leather in the more important parts, the unfairness of the proposition becomes apparent when the psychological effect of the branding of the shoes is considered.

True it is that low grades, inferior shoes are manufactured for certain trade, and which will not bear close inspection without revealing their status and are sold at a price legitimately. When this grade of shoe is palmed off on the public as something which it is not, is where the fraud is perpetrated. As Secretary Geuting trenchantly remarks: "The fraud is not in the shoes themselves, but in the way in which they are sold. The fraud lies in misrepresentation, in fraudulent advertising by unscrupulous dealers, and the remedy seems to be obvious. * * * There have been sample shoe store frauds, fire sale frauds, bankrupt stock frauds, auction frauds and the like, and it is at these that the legislation should be aimed."

While the "sales" enumerated are almost invariably had in the large cities, nevertheless the merchant in the smaller towns and country feel their effect. There is not anything a ruralite enjoys so much as a "bargain," and both sexes of this citizen will travel a good many miles to indulge his propensity when it comes to buying any article, and boots and shoes particularly. Of course, the buyer of such stuff invariab gets "stung," but the damage done the local retailer, and ther fore any law that could mir mize, if not altogether aboli the fraudulent sale of spurio shoes would receive his hear support. A comprehensive frau ulent advertising and merchandi ing law, which will make it misdemeanor, if not a felony, misrepresent, misbrand, over ra or falsely represent any mercha dise offered the public in inte state commerce is in order ar will be welcomed.

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

ted at the recent annual convention of the Pennsylvania and Atlantic Seaboard Retail Hardware Association regarding the efficacy of parcel post.

Secretary Lewis, in his regular port, was severe in his strictures the advantages offered the catgue concerns by the parcel post. ue, it is also that other continuts of this journal's readers are ewise affected detrimentally by persistent and successful efforts the mail-order operators, be they ge or small. At another convenn, namely that of the Michigan tail Hardware Association, a per was read on "How to Make Mail-Order House Catalogue Feeder Instead of a Bleeder," in ich the author—a retailer of enprise and repute—advanced the ory that a local dealer can meet competition of the catalogue uses.

Opinions of this kind are welne, because they are the right rt. With all due respect to the ws of Secretary Lewis, they are sically wrong. It is well to reember, perhaps, as was remarked ars ago by a distinguished man in blic life, "it is a condition and not theory that confronts us." This certainly applicable to the parcel st in connection with the mailder business. The benefits conred by the parcel post on the pub at large are so great that the obctions of any one or a dozen anches of commercial business e puerile, to express it mildly. ie work before the energetic, reurceful retail merchant is to iginate methods and means to nimize and nullify, so far as posle, the influence of the mail-order tupus, to use a familiar and overrked term, with the buyer at reI.

As is well observed by an esemed Pacific Coast contemporary, e "Oregon Merchants' Magaie":—

We will venture the assertion that not 10 per cent. of the merchants who are affected by mail order competition have ever studied the mail order catalogues, the well spring of the mail order business. If a merchant's competitor had succeeded in securing a number of his

as we did, they all would sell it. This doesn't apply to Roasted Coffee alone, so to the Green buyers we want to call special attention to our line of Re-cleaned and Guaranteed Cup Green Coffees, which are the choicest selections out of the numerous invoices that we import. To the merchant who does his own roasting this is of vital importance, for it is in his selection of the raw Coffee that he makes his errors. One thing sure, when he places his order for Parke's Re-cleaned and Guaranteed Cup Green Coffees, he is going to have good results, for being Re-cleaned there is less loss in the roasting and being Guaranteed Cup Quality, they will be absolutely satisfactory in the cup and this is necessary if your Coffee sales are to make progress. We have consistently worked to benefit the Coffee sales of our clients and we can increase yours too if you make use of our Quality propositions that will promptly produce seeable results.

valuable patrons he would immediately focus his business mind on the problem and unearth whyfores and reasons for this loss, and at the same time seek the remedy. This protective business instinct does not seem to be in working order when the mail order house is at issue. The average dealer merely throws up his hands and condemns the mail order house, the patrons thereof and the capitalistic world, which he has come to believe is the fount of all trade evils.

Many merchants I have known maintain an air of injured antagonism to mail order patrons instead of placing every service and courtesy available at their command. I know one merchant in particular who will not speak to a former patron, for the sole reason that she buys from the catalogue houses. This, of course, is an infrequent indiscretion, but it amply illustrates the morbid resentment of some merchants against a system which, though unethical, is still legal, and is likely to remain a factor for some years.

It is a well-known fact that the goods enumerated at marvelous length and in wonderful variety, seemingly, are not all one's fancy paints. The best-known, Nationally advertised brands—articles of unqualified merit and dependability—never appear in these voluminous publications. Whoever heard of "Keen Kutter" goods, Disston saws, Glenwood ranges, Simonds saws, Corbin's locks, Masury's or Lucas' paints, and a dozen other desirable lines, being listed in a mail-order catalogue? Not one, and they never will be. The manufacturers of the specialties specified have a reputation, built on honor and merit, which the catalogue man cannot asperse or cheapen by faking, or pretending to have "something just as good," the old and reprehensible substitution cry that he works to the limit unless the up-to-date retail merchant "calls the bluff."

If the modern merchant were to put on his thinking cap once in a while, instead of simply bewailing his lot and bitterly censuring mail-order methods, digging up a scheme or two to fit and energize his merchandising policy, and thereby counteract and turn the flank of the enemy, there would be a different story to tell in the course of a comparatively short period. The active support of the trade associations, those especially appealing to the general merchants in the smaller cities and towns, and the co-operation of the members will be necessary. A close investigation and study of mail-order methods, analyses of the supposed alluring prices, the enticement of novelties and "bargain" lines; in short, a duplication of the catalogue man's "drawing cards," suited to the field of operation in view, will go far toward bringing back trade that has been led astray by the specious and ofttimes spurious mail-order offerings. To again quote the authority above, the day of waiting for customers is declining, and the successful merchant of to-morrow must learn the new game of "going after the business."

Old Hardware House Moving to New Quarters.

Beginning its move the first of the year, the general offices of the Supplee Hardware Co., manufacturers and jobbers, are at 513 to 517 Commerce street, Philadelphia, with the other departments to follow as rapidly as possible. The old building at 503 Market street, occupied by the company for a number of years, will be relinquished entirely as soon as alterations are completed. The new Commerce street premises was formerly the home of the Biddle Hardware Co., now out of business. Instead of the two and a half acres of floor space on Market street the Supplee Co. will have five acres at the new location. The main sales room will be on the ground floor, with the offices on the second, stock being carried in the remainder of the spacious building.

In talking informally with the genial, well-informed vice-president of the company, J. S. Bonbright, the other day, who travels the country from one end to the other, getting across the line into Canada, calling on the jobbing trade, he said business was excellent, prospects bright and collections satisfactory. For sixteen years Mr. Bonbright has made two trips yearly, traveling 25,000 miles each time, and is spoken of as one of the few gentlemen in the trade who is familiarly known to every jobber of note in the vast territory he covers, nor one better posted on hardware conditions generally and specifically.

His special department is the production and sale of lawn mowers, and his business for the year shows 20 per cent. increase over the preceding period. Mr. Bonbright's next trip, looking after fall trade, will be from July to December. Besides his telling work the company travels 75 men, visiting the retail merchants in all sections. Their mills have recently been arranged and reorganized, so t they may be operated in sepa parts or units, an electrical eq ment supplying the motive pow great measure. By the new in lation a pressing demand for sp lines can be promptly met at time with convenience as compa with former conditions.

The preliminary campaign the fall trade is under way, new literature now going thro the mails, first to the jobbers, in turn supply the retailers, tho merchants will also be taken of on direct application to house. The neat folders, in col will tell the lawn mower st briefly, forcibly and convincingl text and illustrations. One cu from a photograph and shows mower actually cutting nails w out injury to the blades. It is a markable test, and to use a fami phrase, "this is going some."

At the exhibition held under auspices of the Pennsylvania Atlantic Seaboard Retail Ha ware Association in the Qua City last week, the Supplee Ha ware Co. occupied a gener space. No goods were displa however, but simply a "com station" maintained, with Mr. B bright in charge, where easy ch for visiting retailers were to had, roomy lockers for overc and ladies' wraps, the finest cigars passed out and a bunch handsome salesmen in waiting extend the glad hand and a cor welcome. The orders entered into comfortable figures.

¶ We like to think of ourselves as Business Architects for our coffee customers. There are great possibilities in a retail coffee department—every grocer knows that. The Delivery Question!

WEIGH IT CAREFULLY

Weigh the delivery question carefully. It is a large expense item in your business. Take the cost per week of keeping two horses and paying two drivers, divide it by the number of orders delivered and you'll be surprised at the cost per order. You'll see what has been taking too large a share of your profits.

One International Motor Truck will do as much work as two horses and wagons; by using it you materially reduce your delivery cost. No matter what it has been costing you per order to deliver goods, you'll be able to do it for much less money with an International Motor Truck. The saving is just like that much extra profit on every order. Don't guess about motor delivery—let us send you the facts. Send for our descriptive catalogue. Tell us all the particulars about your delivrey problem and we'll let you know how we can help you.

International Harvester Company of America

504 HARVESTER BUILDING CHICAGO U S A

CCXLVII.—The Usefulness of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Small Freight Shipper or Receiver.

I have received the following letter:—

Quincy, Ill., Feb. 5, 1914.

Elton J. Buckley, Esq.

If you think the matter of sufficient importance, why not tell your many readers what the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington is for and how an ordinary merchant could use it if he had to. We all see the name Interstate Commerce Commission mentioned often in the papers, but few of us know exactly what it is for, or what we would have to do to take advantage of it if we thought some railroad was not treating us fairly. You can probably make it plainer.

Respectfully yours.

ORMOND & SMITH.

I do think this subject sufficiently important to treat, and have been intending to treat it for some months, but so many other things have pressed that I have not gotten at it. This is an opportunity.

Briefly, the Interstate Commerce Commission is a sort of court, created by Congress, whose object is to see that railroads, railways and steamship lines doing an interstate business, i. e., running from State to State, behave themselves and treat everybody alike. The Commission has power to reduce freight and passenger rates, if they are too high, forbid proposed advances in rates, see that rates are fairly adjusted between different points so that the shipper getting a short haul is not compelled to pay more than the shipper getting a long haul; prevent a railroad from giving one shipper or receiver a better freight rate than it gives another; compel railroads to provide proper facilities for unloading and delivery of freight, and so on.

Any small interior merchant, whose freight receipts are confined to shipments received from his jobber, has precisely the same right to complain to the Interstate Commerce Commission, if he has a grievance against some railroad, as the large merchant or manufacturer, whose freight transactions run into many thousands of dollars every year. And the Commission will listen to him just as readily. The above outline of the Commission's powers will suggest what sort of grievances against a railroad a shipper could have. Improper, excessive, unfair freight rates, relatively less to one shipper than to another, would be a very important grievance. Another would exist where a railroad, as a matter of regular practice, dumped freight off at a wayside station and left it there with inadequate protection. Still a third would exist where two railroads, natural competitors to the same section, refused to compete, but mulcted shippers along their lines by charging excessive rates. There have been many complaints by shippers at rules and regulations issued by the railroads themselves—complaints that they were unfair, oppressive, unduly favored one shipper or class of shippers, at the expense of others and so on.

There have also been many complaints because railroads have insisted on putting certain merchandise, when shipping it as freight, in a classification which would take a higher rate than the shipper thought he ought to pay.

The Interstate Commerce Commission will not, however, go into the matter of collecting freight claims. It has many times ruled that they are individual business matters between the railroad and the shipper, and that the shipper who cannot collect his dues from a railroad company should go into his own courts.

It would hardly be profitable or interesting to go deeply into the technical practice before the Commission, but I should say something about how to prepare a complaint. The rule is as follows:—

Complaints must be in typewriting on one side of the paper only, on paper not more than 8½ inches wide and not more than 12 inches long and weighing not less than 16 pounds to the ream, folio base, 17 by 22 inches, with left-hand margin not less than 1½ inches wide, setting forth briefly the facts claimed to constitute a violation of the law. Complaints may also be printed in the size designated in Rule XIV regarding briefs. The corporate name of the carrier or carriers complained against must be stated in full without abbreviations, and the address of the complainant, with the name and address of his attorney or counsel, if any, must appear upon each copy of the complaint. The complaint need not be verified (sworn to), but must be signed in ink by the complainant or his duly authorized attorney. The complainant must furnish as many complete copies of the complaint as there may be parties complained against to be served, including receiver or receivers, and three additional copies for the use of the Commission.

No freight shipper or receiver with a grievance against a railroad need employ an attorney to present it. If he follows the above rule, he can prepare and present it himself, and it will get precisely the same attention.

Here is a suggestion for the form of a complaint against a railroad or steamship company where an improper freight rate is being charged. The form can be modified when the complaint is of a different nature:

Your Name
vs.
The ——— Railroad Company,
——— ——— Railway Company.
} (Insert corporate title, without abbreviation of carrier (or carriers) necessary defendants).

The complaint of the above-named complainant respectfully shows:—

I. That (complainant should here state occupation and place of business, also whether it is a corporation, firm or partnership, and if a firm or partnership, the individual names of the parties composing the same should be given.)

II. That the defendant (defendants) above named is a common carrier (are common carriers) engaged in the transportation of passengers and property, wholly by railroad (partly by railroad and partly by water), between points in the State of ——— and points in the State of ———, and as su common carrier (carriers) is (ar subject to the provisions of the to regulate commerce appro February 4, 1887, and acts amen tory thereof or supplementary the to.

III. That (state in this and s sequent paragraphs, to be numbe the matter or matters intended be complained of, naming ev rate, rule, regulation or prac whose lawfulness is challenged, also each point of origin and po of destination between which rates complained of are applied.

(Following this a paragraph paragraphs should be inserted leging that by reason of the fa stated in the foregoing paragra complainant (complainants) (have) been subjected to the p ment of rates of transporta which were when exacted, and are, unjust and unreasonable in v lation of Section 1 of the act regulate commerce, or unduly criminatory in violation of S tions 2, 3 or 4 thereof.)

Wherefore complainant prays defendants may be severally quired to answer the charges h in; that after due hearing and vestigation an order be made c manding said defendants and e of them to cease and desist f the aforesaid violation of said to regulate commerce, and estab and put in force and apply as m ima in future to the transpo tion of ——— between the ship and destination points named paragraph ——— hereof, in lieu the rates named in said paragr such other rates as the Commis may deem reasonable and just also pay to complainants by of reparation for the unla charges hereinbefore described sum of ———, or such other as, in view of the evidence to adduced herein, the Commis may consider complainant enti to), and that such other and ther order or orders be made the Commission may cons proper in the premises and c plainant's cause may appear to quire.

What Have You Got to Say About This?

Seems to me I spend most of my time, when I ain't trying to sell goods, working to make people think the same as I do. I've got some ideas, I have. I may be fat and homely and all that, but once in a while I think some thoughts, and I know what I want.

When there ain't anything else to do, I like to unload a mess of those thoughts on other people and see how they take it. Between you and me, they don't take it very good. Seems to me I can stir up a rumpus any time just by getting off thoughts. People don't agree with 'em. Why if I had a nickel for every time I've been insulted—talked to like a mangy dog, that's right—I wouldn't have to go out on the road at all. I could sit home and talk to my wife all the time. Think what the poor girl misses.

I work to make people think like I do all for their own good. I want to make 'em see things right. The only way to do that is to think the same as I do.

Now I had a fearful fuss the other day with a fellow about this idea I have that there's too many grocery stores. He couldn't see it. I stood his ignorance as long as I could and then I up and told him, in a lady-like way, that he was simply plumb fat headed. Then he called me something that of course wasn't true and I took my spools and went home. It was a mean fuss, that's what it was, all his fault, too.

Now we'll see whether I ain't right.

The last place I got into last week was a town of 4,859 people. Oh, I've got me facts all right. It was the county seat. The court house and the jail are there and all the other offices. They have court there and a trolley, and people come from all 'round to get drunk and buy goods. Now how many grocery stores are there there? There's twelve, that's how many there are. Two chain stores and three good regular stores and the rest ain't much. I don't know whether the two chain stores are making anything or not—they do lots of business—but I do know that the three stores are all making good money. Not a thousand a week, understand, but good money for a store like that. And I know this, too, that if everybody sizes 'em up right, not a blamed one of the other seven are making anything more than a scratch living. One of 'em is run by the man's wife, while he works on the railroad. A lame fellow keeps another and manages to live, and that's the way it goes.

You could drop maybe five of those seven stores off the map and nobody'd be any worse off. The seven stores that were left would have a bang-up business—the kind the grocery business ought to be, but in most cases ain't.

I ain't done yet. I've been going to that town for five years and I know something about it. How many dry goods stores are there? Three, one big and two fair size. How many shoe stores? One big one, one fair sized and two little places that sell mostly to darkies. How many clothing stores? One good one where they sell good stuff—I've got a tie on now I got there; wish you could see it; it's some tie—another one that ain't so good and a little department store that has a little men's clothes department. How many drug stores? Three.

Now don't start to tell me there's always more grocery stores than there are other stores. I know that. But there ain't any need to be so many more. Why are there so many more? Because going into the grocery business is as easy as falling off a log. Everybody thinks he can do it, and he goes ahead and does. You can't go in the shoe business without knowing something about shoes, so everybody don't go in.

Now listen here. Every fellow in the shoe business in that place, maybe with one exception, is supposed to be making a better living than the biggest grocer in the place. Of course nobody knows exactly what a fellow makes but himself, but in a country town, believe me, the people are pretty much on.

The fellow that has the biggest dry goods store is making big money. His wife wears a sealskin sack, so they tell me. Any sealskin sacks in the grocery business? Not so's you could notice 'em.

The fellow that used to run one of the drug stores—he's sold out to a clerk now—has got rich out of his store. He's looked on as one of the best fixed fellows in the place. Any of the grocers sold out and living on their money? Oh shut up! Don't take my valuable time answering such fool questions.

I'll bet I can go to any town in any State and find about the same thing. There ain't a mite of doubt about it, if a man will keep his eyes open. If we could get rid of some of the stores, you could make more money and so could I, because all of the stores that stayed could make better profits.

Here's the hard part—when I go to Congress and pass my law cutting down the grocery stores, how'll we decide which to boot out and which to let stay? Yep, that is some hard. I don't want any part in that scrap. I'll be too old anyway.

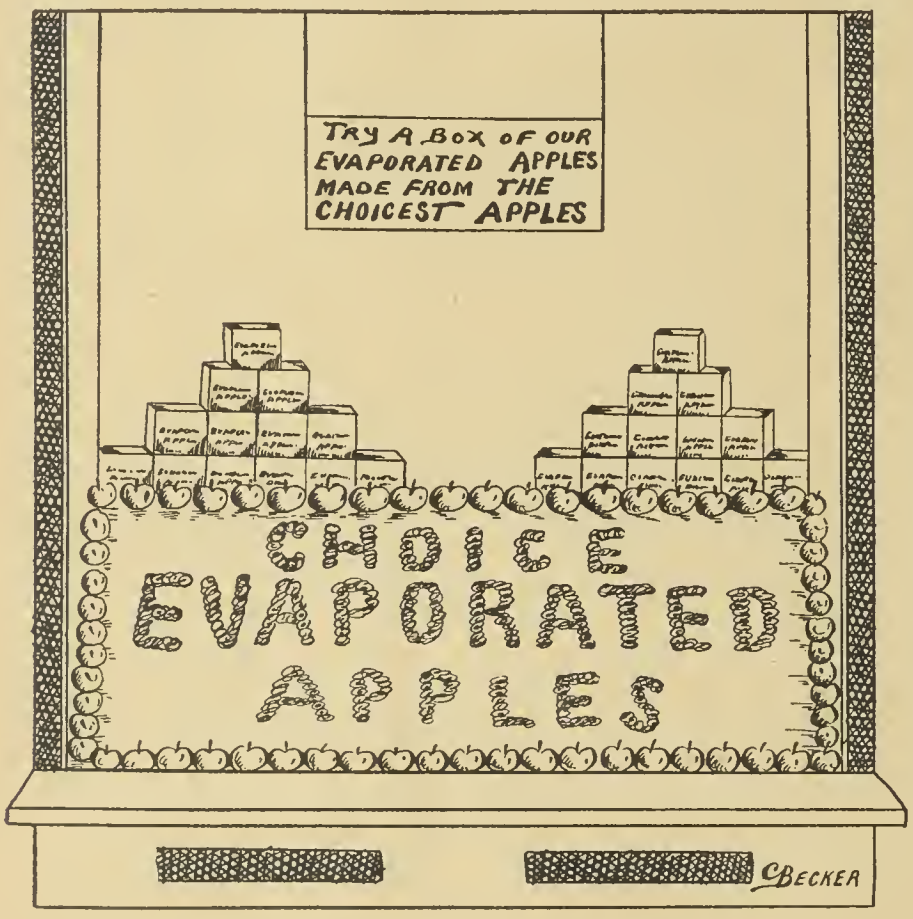
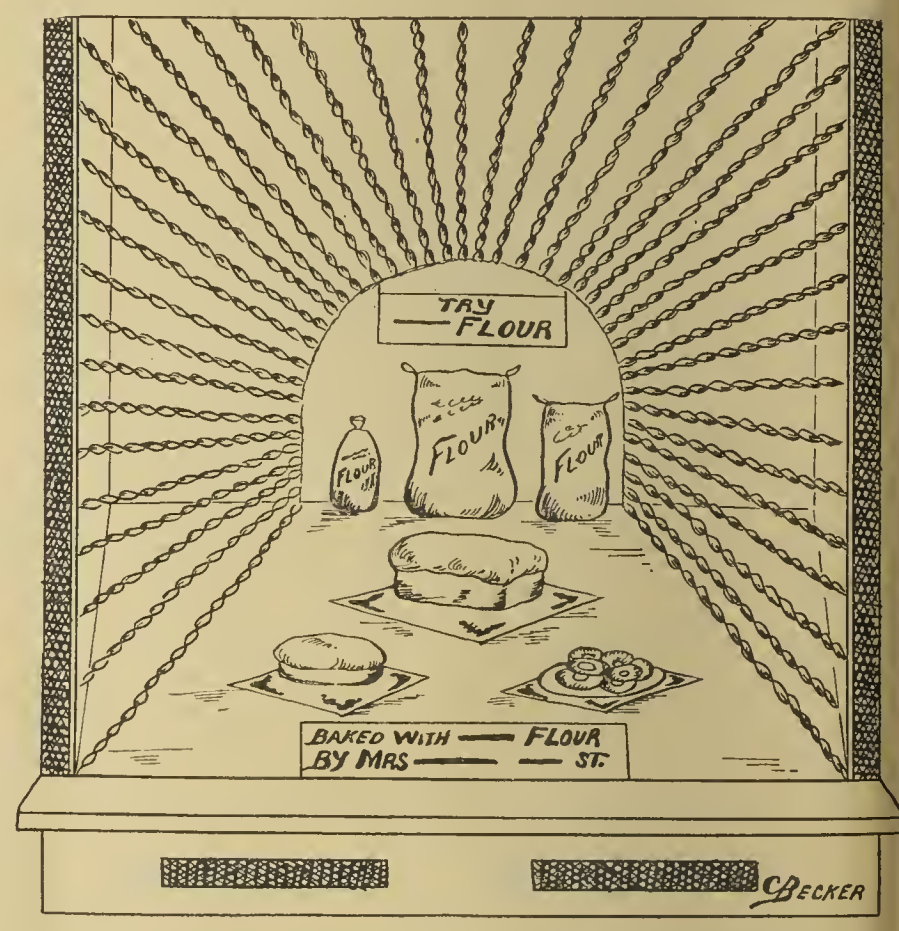
Evaporated Apples.

Just now, when apples are higher in price than usual, there is more demand for evaporated apples. The illustration shows a neat and attractive way to display them. To arrange the window, first make a slant of boards over the entire window; have it about eighteen inches high at the rear. Cover it with white crepe paper and spell the words with slices of the evaporated apples. Polish some choice red apples with a piece of wool cloth and place them all around the slant at the edge. Along the top they are held in position by being forced on a wire nail without a head. Place a narrow board along the top of the slant and place two pyramids of the apples in boxes. Suspend a sign-card with lettering as in cut.



Flour Trim.

A nice display of a certain brand of flour you wish to introduc your customers is arranged in the following manner, as illustra Cut pale yellow crepe paper in long strips about two inches wide, them along the top and sides of the window, and gather the together and tack them fast at the side of the window, out of the until you are ready to arrange them. Now cover the bottom of window with some of the pale yellow paper. Along the front in centre place a card with the name and address of one of your custor that baked the goods displayed. Place three white paper napkins which display a large loaf of bread, a plate of doughnuts and a du cake. Open a hoop and nail a strip of wood at each end. Place i the rear of the window in the centre and cover with the yellow pa Now twist and fasten all the strips of crepe paper to it, as in illustrat Place three sizes of sacks of flour under it. Suspend a signcard the name of the flour displayed.



St. Louis Consumers' League Will Seek to Dissociate Two Inconsistent Lines.

The Consumers' League of St. Louis proposes to make it illegal for grocery stores to act as agents for laundries on the ground that the mixing of pure food and dirty linen is inimical to good health. The matter is being agitated by Mrs. E. T. Senseney, chairman of the League's pure food committee. The attention of Mrs. Senseney was called to the fact that in many parts of St. Louis butcher shops, restaurants and groceries receive consignments of laundry as agents. Many food dispensing establishments receive bundles of laundry and ask no questions. Even although the person sending the laundry may be afflicted with some contagious disease, the bundle is cepted without question, and fu gation is never suggested. danger can be seen easily. disease germs may be comm cated to other packages of laun and the food in the establishm may become contaminated.

If This Bill Passes Manufacturers Can Fix Retail Prices on All Sorts of Proprietary Goods

House Member from New Hampshire Introduces Bill Giving Manufacturers, Upon Filing Statement With Corporation Bureau, Right to Fix and Maintain Retail Selling Prices. Privilege Has Four Conditions Attached.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
February 26, 1914.

If the bill just introduced in the House by Representatives Stevens, of New Hampshire, becomes a law, the manufacturer of proprietary articles will be given legal power to fix and maintain the retail selling price of his product, which right has been mostly denied him by the United States Supreme Court. The bill has been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The main purpose of the measure is to encourage price standardization on branded merchandise of uniform quality by enabling producers of such goods to name and legally uphold the retail price on the wares. The publicity clauses of the bill are most marked and are regarded as reflecting the administration's attitude in the matter of open dealing with the public.

Under the terms of the Stevens Bill producers who wish to avail themselves of the privilege of naming and enforcing the retail price on their merchandise are required to file with the Bureau of Corporations a statement of their brands or trade-marks and also the uniform prices to be charged at wholesale and in sales to the public.

Throughout the bill the most painstaking efforts are apparent to prevent price discrimination in sales to dealers or consumers. The effect of the measure would be to create in the field of branded merchandise an absolute uniformity of price at all times and in all parts of the country, in the case of those producers who could show their good faith. Monopolies are specifically excepted from those entitled to the privileges named in the measure, none but independent producers being permitted to name their retail prices. Thus all criticism of possible encouragement of monopoly is disarmed. In fact, the requirements imposed upon those manufacturers availing themselves of the right to supervise their retail prices are perhaps more drastic than any contained in the tentative measures previously introduced in Congress.

The full text of the bill, which is regarded of the utmost importance, is as follows:—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in any contract for the sale of articles of commerce to any dealer, wholesale or retail, by any producer, grower, manufacturer or owner thereof, under trade mark or special brand, hereinafter referred to as the "vendor," it shall be lawful for such vendor, whenever the contract constitutes a transaction of commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, or in any Territory of the United States, or in the District of Columbia, or between any such Territory and another, or between any such Territory or Territories and any States or the District of Columbia, or with a foreign nation or nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or a foreign nation or nations, to prescribe the sole, uniform price at which each article covered by such contract may be resold: Provided, That the following conditions are complied with:—

(A) Such vendor shall not have any monopoly or control of the market for articles belonging to the same general class of merchandise as such article or articles of commerce as shall be covered by such contract of sale; nor shall such vendor be a party to any agreement, combination or understanding with any competitor in the production, manufacture or sale of any merchandise in the same general class in regard to the price at which the same shall be sold either to dealers at wholesale or retail or to the public.

(B) Such vendor shall affix a notice to each article of commerce or to each carton, package or other receptacle inclosing an article or articles of commerce covered by such contract of sale stating the price prescribed by the vendor at the time of the delivery of said article as the uniform price of sale of such article to the public, and the name and address of such vendor, and bearing the said trade mark or special brand of such vendor. Such article or articles of commerce covered thereby shall not be resold except with such notice affixed thereto or to the cartons, packages or other receptacles inclosing the same.

(C) Such vendor shall file in the Bureau of Corporations a statement setting forth the trade mark or special brand owned or claimed by such vendor in respect of such article or articles of commerce to be covered by such contract of sale, and also, from time to time, as the same may be adopted or modified, a schedule setting forth the uniform price of sale thereof to dealers at wholesale, and the uniform price of sale thereof to dealers at retail from whatever source acquired and the uniform price of sale thereof to the public, and upon filing such statement such vendor shall pay to the Commissioner of Corporations a registration fee of $10. The price to the vendee under any such contract shall be one of such uniform prices to wholesale and to retail dealers according as such vendee shall be a dealer at wholesale or a dealer at retail, and there shall be no discrimination in favor of any vendee by the allowance of a discount for any cause, by the grant of any special concession or allowance, or by the payment of any rebate or commission, or by any other device whatsoever.

(D) Any article of commerce or any carton, package or other receptacle inclosing an article or articles of commerce covered by such contract and in possession of a dealer may be sold for a price other than the uniform price for resale by such dealer as set forth in the schedule provided in the next preceding paragraph (C): First, if such dealer shall cease to do business and the sale is made in the course of winding up the business of such dealer, or if such dealer shall have beco bankrupt, or a receiver of the bu ness of such dealer shall have b appointed, provided that such arti or articles of commerce shall h first been offered to the ven thereof by such dealer or the le representative of such dealer written offer at the price paid the same by such dealer, and t such vendor, after reasonable opp tunity to inspect such article or ticles, shall have refused or glected to accept such offer, or, s ond, of such article of commerce contents of such carton, package other receptacle shall have beco damaged, deteriorated or soil Provided, That such damaged, teriorated or soiled article sh have first been offered to the ven by such dealer by written offer, the price paid for the same by su dealer, and that such vendor, af reasonable opportunity to insp such article or articles, shall ha refused or neglected to accept su offer, and that such damaged, teriorated or soiled article sh thereafter only be offered for s by such dealer with prominent tice to the purchaser that su article is damaged, deteriorated soiled, and that the price thereof reduced because of such damage.

The measure has some st backing and the committee probably grant hearings on it a early date. Hou

There is Nothing New in the Bleach Flour Decision

Does Not Alter the Situation as it Was Before Under Fed and State Laws. U. S. Supreme Court Merely Says that Lower Court Erred When it Said that Any Quantity Poisonous Ingredient is an Adulteration. Law Cle Provides that to Constitute Adulteration Enough Mus Used to Injure Health.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
Feb. 27, 1914.

The United States Supreme Court last Tuesday handed down what seems to be considered an important and radical decision under the Federal Food and Drugs Act of 1906, but it is said by those in position to know that there is nothing at all new about it, but that it is simply a declaration of the clear language of the law. In the bleached flour case the court decided that the addition of a foreign ingredient like bleach is not an adulteration unless enough is used to render the article harmful. The case was that brought many months ago by the Government against the Lexington Mill and Elevator Co.

The evidence showed that the Lexington Mill and Elevator Co. had used on a certain shipm of 625 sacks of flour what known as the Alsop proces bleaching by the use of nitro peroxide-gas generated by tricity. This process resulte the insertion of 1.8 part of po per million, calculated as ni gen. The respondent comp admitted all the allegations a the Alsop process, but conten that the poison was not in s cient quantity to be injurious.

The court ruled as follows:

If it cannot by any possibili when the facts are reasonably c sidered, injure the health of a consumer, such flour, though ha ing a small addition of poisono or deleterious ingredients, may be condemned under the act.

The Government also tended that bleach was used the purpose of concealing defe but the Supreme Court held t the evidence of this was ins cient. The reversal was on point, and also because the lower court instructed the jury that the use of any poison, regardless of quantity, was an adulteration. The case simply goes back for retrial.

NOTE.—The United States Supreme Court's decision in the above case really means nothing new whatever. It has not the importance which is being credited to it, for it is merely a reiteration of what the law itself says, in words that are hardly susceptible of more than one interpretation. The bleached flour case was originally brought in Missouri and now goes back there for retrial.

The Federal Food and Drugs Act, among other definitions of adulteration, contains the following: "If it contain any added poisonous or other added deleterious ingredients which may render such article injurious to health." Obviously under this provision the use of bleach is not an adulteration (always provided it is not used to conceal defects) unless it is used in sufficient quantity to injure the health. The Missouri court held that the use of any quantity of a poisonous substance was an adulteration, without regard to whether it made the article injurious or not. It is difficult to see how it could have done this in face of the clear language of the law, and the Supreme Court said it was error. In its decision it merely declared that under the law the quantity used was the controlling factor, and as stated, this is no departure from anything that has not been generally known and understood.

Of course, there is another phase to the flour bleaching case, which has not yet been decided. If bleach was used to conceal defects, it is an adulteration regardless of quantity. The court below heard evidence as to whether it was used to conceal defects, but the Supreme Court rules that the evidence on which it decided the case was not sufficient.

The law of this and all other similar cases is this: If a foreign ingredient is used to conceal defects, and this deceives the buyer as to damage or inferiority, there is adulteration regardless of any question of quantity or harmfulness. If the foreign ingredient is used merely to improve appearance, or in the case of color in butter, then there is no adulteration unless enough of the foreign ingredient is used to injure the health.

The decision does not in any degree alter the situation as it existed before it was handed down, either under Federal or State laws.—ED.

The New York Letter

The Bleached Flour Decision. The Food Trades Conference. Protection for Retailers from Fly-at-Nights. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, February 26, 1914.

In the flour trade a number of mill representatives and dealers who were interviewed regarding the bleached flour decision said that the decision would have no direct influence on the flour market here, because the trade will not buy or handle the bleached flour to any extent. The public is now used to the unbleached flour, having turned against the bleached flour some time ago.

It was stated that the big mills of the Northwest, making spring wheat flour, will not bleach it under any circumstances and will have no occasion for doing so. Any bleaching, it was said, will be in winter wheat flour.

One advocate of bleaching said that it simply does quickly what nature does in a few months; that it ages the flour. Others pointed out, however, that the hasty bleaching by artificial means may not produce exactly the same results as the work which nature does slowly, even if the chemists cannot find the exact difference.

Under the decision, as it is understood here, the adulterations are not prohibited unless it is shown that they are introduced to disguise the product in some way or unless it be positively proved that they are harmful to the health of some of the consumers.

A number of men in the trade indorse the suggestion made by Dr. Wiley, since the decision was published, that Congress be requested to amend the law by striking out the phrase "which may prove harmful to health." If this phrase were struck from the law, then products containing adulterations of any kind would be prohibited without proving specific harm to the health of any individuals.

Among those who are disappointed in the decision, it is argued that even though a food product may be doing much harm to the health of consumers, perhaps slowly and gradually, yet it might take a long time to prove that such harm is actually being done in specified cases. For this reason some of those who discussed the question agreed with the view that the decision practically kills the effect of the pure food law and that, therefore, an urgent demand should be made upon Congress to take whatever action seems necessary.

One of the suggestions is that if the adulterants are to be permitted, then at least the manufacturers should be required to state upon the labels the fact that the adulterants are used and the quantities used.

An important event to-morrow will be the meeting of the National Food Trades Conference in the Waldorf-Astoria. Louis Runkel, the president of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association will preside as chairman of the conference and John A. Green, the secretary of the National Retail Grocers' Association, will act as secretary of the meeting.

Addresses will be delivered by representatives of wholesalers' and retailers' associations of various civic organizations and of various departments of the city and State governments.

In general, the object is to promote the cause of pure food, uniform food laws and honest labels.

The meeting was arranged in accordance with resolutions adopted a couple of months ago and first published at that time in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

In accordance with resolutions adopted by the United Retail Grocers' Association of Brooklyn, as reported some time ago, a bill has been drafted by its attorneys and will be presented at the legislative session in Albany to give retail grocers protection against "dead beats" and "fly-by-nights," who move from one part of the town to another without paying their bills and often leaving no traces of their new addresses.

One plan is to have a summons in suits for less than $25, brought for necessaries of life, carry provision for body execution.

Another plan is to have a provision that on judgments for daily necessaries no kind of property shall be exempt from execution.

It is anticipated that there will be strong opposition to either plan. The opposition will be based on the claims that such provisions are violations of the rights of personal liberty, or in the nature of imprisonment for debt, and that such drastic legislation should therefore not be enacted.

However, the grocers will show that there is a large class of "dead beats" moving about from one part of the city to another and that there are too many people who feel it is easy to beat a grocer's bill. It will be urged, therefore, that some additional protection should be given the retail dealers.

It is expected that various other classes of retailers, including the owners of meat markets, will back the movement.

WITH THE EDITOR

A Price-cutter's $120,000 Estate.

A Philadelphia druggist named C. G. A. Loder, who for many years conducted a drug store at 16th and Chestnut streets, died last week leaving an estate of $120,000, most of which, it is said, he made out of his drug business.

Mr. Loder was a typical cutter. He has featured himself for years as a man who sold all proprietary preparations at cost, and he really did sell Peruna and a long list of other such things at very low prices—lower than the average cut-price druggist sold them. Several years ago he sued the National Wholesale Druggists' Association and a number of other associations for conspiring, as he said, to prevent him from getting goods because he cut their prices. He won his case and collected heavy damages.

Yet Mr. Loder, the price-cutter, became rich—out of his business. By selling goods at cut prices, he accumulated an estate of $120,000 on the normal income of which he could have retired. Did he make his profits from the sale of goods at cut prices? Assuredly he did not and yet he did. He made as much profit on goods he sold at cost as he made on other goods, but he made it indirectly, as all cutters must make it. Something else carried a double load, but the load was carried, never forget that.

A Squarer Deal.

The manufacturer of food or drug products is being given a squarer deal under the present administration than he ever got from either the Taft or the much-vaunted Roosevelt administration. A brief Washington dispatch published elsewhere tells how. If the Department finds it necessary to hold a preliminary examination into some phase of a manufacturer's compliance with the law, and as a result of what it finds it decides not to bring a case, the old way was never to tell him anything about it. He knew that he had practically been accused of violating the law—some of his methods had been called into question—and he never knew what minute a United States Marshal might serve a writ upon him. Even if the Government found that his methods were blameless and the complaint totally unfounded, it never told him, but left him to worry for months over the possibility of criminal prosecution. A single word would have eased his mind, but this word was never spoken, though it was clearly his due.

The new way is to tell a manufacturer decently and frankly what the Government intends to do or not to do about his case.

A Good Movement Growing.

This journal has received from the executive department of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia a copy of the following order:—

Ordered:—

That hereafter the Commissioners will take no cognizance of complaints against officers or employees of the District Government for non-payment of debt so far as the complainant is concerned, beyond the acknowledgment of the complainant's letter. Persons claiming to be creditors of such officers or employees, or collectors of debts or claims against them, shall be denied access to them for the purpose of presenting or collecting such claims during business hours, or while the officers or employees concerned are on duty.

While the District Government will not be a collecting agency in the premises, any officer or employees thereof who fails, without justification, to pay his just debts is not considered a person suitable for employment in its service. Complaints of non-payment of such debts shall, therefore, be promptly referred to the proper head of office for a report in writing from the officer or employee concerned which, with a summary of the conclusion reached by the Commissioner in charge of the matter, will be filed as a part of the delinquent's official record.

Any officer or employee who fails, without justification, to pay his just debts, may be discharged for this reason, in any case where the Commissioner shall deem the offense sufficiently grave.

By order,
(Signed) WILLIAM TINDALL,
Secretary.

The Money in Five and Ten Cent Goods.

Here is a useful lesson from the 1913 report of the S. S. Kresge Co., a concern operating a chain of 5 and 10-cent stores. We reproduce the following from the New York "Journal of Commerce":—

The report of the S. S. Kresge Co. for the year ended December 31, 1913, shows net profits of $869,686, and increase of $200,507. The balance after preferred dividends was $733,886, equal to 14.67 per cent. on the common stock, as compared with 11.51 per cent. earned in 1912. The income account compares as follows:—

	1913	Increase
Net profits	$869,686	$200,507
Pref. dividends	135,800	42,467
Balance	$733,886	$158,040
Com. dividends	200,000	200,000
Balance	$533,886	*$41,960
Ret. of pref. stock,	74,500	24,500
Balance	$459,386	*$66,460
†Appropriation		*178,083
Surplus	$459,386	$111,623
Previous surplus,	347,262	347,262
Profit and loss Surplus	$806,648	$458,885

——*Decrease. †Amount applicable to operation of company from January 1st to April 30th.

In a time when general business was poor; when tariff and currency bills were pending, this seller of 5 and 10-cent articles cleared $869,686, which is $200,507 more than it cleared in 1912!

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has long suggested that one way of escape from the unprofitable condition of staple merchandise is the 5 and 10-cent department. What better proof of it can there be than this report of the Kresge Co.?

The advantages of the 5 and 10-cent idea are 1, that such articles make an instantaneous and continuous appeal to everybody, and 2, they pay very large relative profits. Two of the most expensive stores in Philadelphia, one on Chestnut street and the other on Market, are to-day occupied by 5 and 10-cent stores. The Market street store is one of the Kresge chain. That their profits on such trifling sales will enable them to pay two of the highest rents in Philadelphia, teaches a lesson to every retail merchant in business.

Chicago Will Sell Cheap Groceries and Supplies to Unemployed.

Chicago opened its first "municipal store" last week. It is exclusively for the benefit of people who are out of work. Persons wishing to deal with the store are required to fill out an application blank, stating in writing that they were out of work and also giving the name of their last employer and their residence, so that an investigator could look them up. Prices as compared with those asked in retail stores are:—

	Regular Price	City Price
Soap, bar	$0.05	$0.03½
Beans, pound	.07	.03½
Rice, pound	.06	.02½
Bacon, pound	.30	.17
Canned goods	.10	.06
Rolled oats, pound	.03½	.02
Coffee, pound	.35	.19
Tea, pound	.60	.24
Canned syrup	.12	.09
Lard, 3-pound can	.50	.35
Sugar, pound	.05½	.04
Flour, 25-pound sack,	.65	.52

For the present the stock will consist of groceries and staple commodities, but later it is planned to add clothing, fuel and other necessities. The city of Chicago has appropriated $25,000 for the establishment of stores. If this one is a success others will be established in all parts of the city, where only the unemployed will be allowed to buy. If all of these stores meet with success and the approval of the people it will mean the establishment of municipal markets.

18—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because in a nutshell, people want them

¶ That after all is the crux of the whole question. The people do want nationally advertised goods. Manufacturers are spending millions of dollars yearly in a legitimate and highly successful effort to make people want them. The wise merchant takes advantage of that—goes along with it—makes money out of it—instead of attempting to stem the tide. How much faster you can swim with a current than against it!

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

A Merchants' Accident Insurance Company.

Adamstown, Pa., Feb. 26, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Is there in your city an accident insurance company whose insurance policies are written for merchants only or have special rates made for them? My reason for asking is, it seems to me there was an agent who called on us years ago who claimed to sell merchants and grocers only, and had a special rate. What is the name of a good accident insurance company of your city?

Yours truly,
H. F. SNADER & Co.

We know of no such company. All accident insurance companies have special policies, and special plans, but we have never heard of any company that wrote insurance for merchants only. One of the best accident insurance companies in the United States is the Aetna Co., of Boston, represented in Philadelphia by Hoskins & Howell, Fifth and Chestnut streets. You can probably find an agent nearer your town, however. The Travelers' is another very good company.

Whose Card is This?

Conewango Valley, N. Y.,
February 20, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Enclosed find post card we received this evening. Who put these cards out? The mail-order people or someone who does not believe in advertising, or who is M. A. B.?

Yours truly,
A. M. SWEET & Co.

The card sent is a regular Government postal printed as follows:

ARE YOU HELPING MAIL ORDER HOUSES THIS WAY?

A former employee of a large Chicago mail order house informed us that they obtain many of their mailing lists of farmers from commission merchants and jobbers who sell to them (the mail order houses).

The commission merchants obtain these lists from retail dealers to whom they sell either directly or indirectly by promising the retail dealer that they will send advertising literature to all the names thus sent.

According to this information you are therefore warned against sending out a list of your customers or people in your vicinity whom you wish to sell to.

If you do, the Chicago mail order houses may get it sooner or later. One Chicago mail order house sells more horse blankets in Pennsylvania than any other State, and a careful investigation indicates that Pennsylvania retail dealers are quickest to send lists of their customers to jobbers and commission merchants of whom they buy.

M. A. B.

Of course this was issued by some enemy of the mail-order houses, but just who we do not know. The initials "M. A. B." do not identify the writer to us. Possibly it is a manufacturer of horse blankets.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"That the name Armour is always a guaranty of quality."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

For instance, I notice in the last issue of the "Canadian Grocer" an advertisement of Wagstaffe's Orange Marmalade. An entire page in the paper is used, a large part of it being filled by the picture of a man who bears no resemblance to a grocer, but looks like a banker of the old school. He is represented as being in convulsions of laughter, and the explanation is given in the following matter printed right beside him: "Your contented smile will burst into a hearty laugh, when you see the results coming your way by handling Wagstaffe's New Season's Seville Orange Marmalade." Remember that this is addressed to merchants who I am sure will feel as I do about it—that it is foolish. I have sold goods for many years, but never yet have large sales of anything made me "burst into a hearty laugh." An appreciative smile to one's self is sometimes indulged in, but nothing more. I do not think this a trifle—such things strike a false note. They seem to show that the man writing them is a stranger to the business—a sort of foreigner, so to speak—and I do not believe that an advertisement conceived in that vein can reach the spot like another one.

This criticism may strike somebody as being fine spun, but I don't believe it.

Respectfully yours,
OSCAR M. BRITTON.

Cuban Raw Sugar Will Continue to Come in Under Lower Duty Than Other Sugars.

Louisiana sugar growers lost the second round of their fight to keep up the duty on sugar last Thursday, when Attorney-General McReynolds handed down an opinion that Cuban sugar is entitled to enter the United States at all times during the life of the present reciprocity treaty, on payment of a duty of 20 per cent. less than other sugars. The Louisiana sugar interests contended that the new tariff act, which reduces all sugar duties 25 per cent. on March 1st, repealed the old law by which Cuban sugar came in 20 per cent. below other sugar. The Attorney-General decides otherwise. The Attorney-General's opinion will result in an almost immediate reduction in the rate on Cuban sugar, keeping it as now, 20 per cent. under other sugars. After March 1st Cuban "95 per cent." sugar will be admitted to the United States on payment of a duty of about 1 cent per pound. The opinion not only affects raw sugar brought into the country after March 1st, but large quantities of sugars held in bonded warehouses awaiting the decision.

y Sixteen Out of One Hundred and fty Were Present, But the Sixteen ere Live Enough to Make Up for e Rest.

ial Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

Washington, D. C., Feb. 26, 1914.

ednesday evening it was my good to attend a meeting of the Retail Grocers' Protective Association of the above city.

We hear a lot about Southern hospitality, but if it can beat that bunch of Washington grocers, it will have to go some.

The affairs of the association are very ably handled by J. H. Goodrich, president; G. E. Bohannon, first vice-president; C. V. Sparrow, second vice-president; A. G. Schmidt, treasurer, and Perry P. Patrick, secretary.

Eleven members comprise the Board of Trustees, and they are thoroughly capable men.

Out of a membership of about 150, only 16 were present; this, I think, was owing to a rainy night and a good burlesque show. You know a fellow does not take his wife to a business meeting of the association, neither does he take her to a burlesque. Guess I had better quit doping out this poor attendance question, or I'll be getting in bad.

The affairs of this association financialy are in elegant condition and show good management.

One thing in particular that warmed my heart to the members present was a donation of twenty-five good big hard dollars to charity; and the name of the association was not to be used in connection with the gift. I believe men of that stamp are bound to succeed.

After the business of the evening was concluded a nice luncheon was served.

In President Goodrich the association has a man who not only lends dignity to the office, but who can swing in a good story to illustrate the point to be brought out. May they live long and prosper.

FRED. W. WILLIAMS.

A Good Sampling Scheme.

As an inducement to attend the opening day of a "Housekeeper's Sale," the Scott Griggs Co., of Cleveland, gave free, with all purchases made in the basement, a bag containing 18 sample packages. How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

VII.—Selling and Buying Coffee Roasted by the Retailer Himself.

By William B. Harris.

Again, the retailer who is roasting his own coffee should not sell his coffees on a price basis, that is, put the emphasis on price, as is done when a dealer offers the best 25-cent coffee or the best 30-cent coffee. Any one can do the same thing, and it ends in price competition, which is ruinous to business. Neither should he sell his coffees under their regular names. Even a straight Santos should be sold under a brand name. Any store can sell Santos or any other kind of coffee. He should identify his store with his brands. Every grade he puts out should have its individual name. His store then has something that will hold his customers if his coffees are good. They must come to that particular store for the brand they are accustomed to. He will find his customers sticking to this or that particular brand. So strong is this habit in the consumer that it has been found upon actual test that she would bring back the brand she had been using when packed under another name as unsatisfactory, but when the coffee so returned was handed her again in the correct bag, it was used and reported satisfactory. The benefit of branding all grades sold can not be too strongly urged.

There is no necessity of buying a large quantity, at least at the start. Usually a bag each of the better grades and two or three bags of Santos are all that is found necessary at the beginning. Green coffees, if kept dry and away from foreign odors, improve with age, so that whatever stock is laid in is bound under normal condition to improve. This applies to all varieties of coffee. Old crop coffees, of course, dry out less, and for this reason, as well as the fact that they have better cup value than new crop coffees, they should be secured whenever possible.

Having found a wholesale dealer in whom he has confidence, the next step is to secure the first shipment of green coffee. The retail dealer can hardly be supposed to know very much about green coffee. He does know that he has been selling coffee and he may perhaps have been ordering straight coffees, such as Bogota, Maracaibo, Santos, etc. He has paid for the most part very little attention to what he secured, so long as his customers did not complain, and if he bought certain so-called blends, did not bother his head to find out whether they were actually blends for the same reason.

Where is he to begin? What coffees should he order and in what quantity? How should he make up his various brands? Suppose he starts the other way around. As mentioned in the last paper, the grocer must determine in the first place the number of brands he will carry. Four is a very good average, and two or even three more can be easily added. Then the amount of profit that each brand is expected to net is the next consideration. The grocer knows what he is getting for coffees and he knows what he is paying for each kind. If his profit is sufficient it gives him at once the basis upon which he must expect to buy his green coffees.

Having arrived at some idea of the roasted cost of his various brands, he should next learn from the wholesale house what can be done on such a basis and what their quotations would be on the green coffees. That is, what coffees they would advise him to buy and what blends he should use in the section of the country in which he is located. At this point he should not make the mistake of filling his brands with Santos. He will need Santos for his lowest grade and in his cheaper blends, but he should not try to load every blend down with Santos and thereby make an unreasonable profit on his higher priced brands.

There is a slight saving in buying coffees in large lots, but there are other points to be considered at the start in the connection therewith. There is the risk of damage to the stock on hand, as well as the possibility of a drop in price and also carrying charges. The coffee takes storage room, must be insured and ties up money. Against this there is the possibility of an advance in price, which of course does occur at times. The safest plan in the long run is to buy supplies in reasonable quantity and not overstock in an endeavor to secure a small additional concession as to price.

Dear Sir:—I am sending you my third circular. I put one out before Thanksgiving, one before Christmas and now this one. I expect to put one out every two weeks from now on. Yours truly,

J. L. KELLAR.

The circular enclosed with this measured 9 x 12 inches, and was very well printed in black on good cream paper. What a difference good paper makes to the impressiveness of a piece of printing. It gives it more tone, and I honestly believe, makes the matter printed on it appear more truthful. Printing advertising matter on poor paper is like sending a salesman out to represent you wearing cheap, poor clothing. I don't care who it is—he will not get the attention that a well dressed salesman will get. But by well dressed I do not mean expensively dressed.

KELLER'S UP-TO-DATE GROCERY

This advertisement starts out well, but gets down to a simple price-list. This is a let down that I am sorry to see. You can quote price when you have nothing else to do—never be tongue-tied about your goods unless there is absolutely nothing good to say of them. When that time comes, change to other goods that you can say something good of. I think the effect of this apple advertisement is lost by not particularizing. "Apples, 15, 20 and 25 cents half a peck, good for eating or cooking," doesn't mean anything more than a mere display of three grades of apples with that kind of a sign on. There is no compelling influence about that. I should have told what the 25-cent apples were, the 20-cent apples, and the 15-cent, and told what each one was good for. You are asking the consumer to pay you nearly twice as much for one grade as for another, yet you do not tell her—in the advertisement—why. You would tell a customer why if you had her face to face, why not tell her in the advertisement? The sour krout advertisement could have been sharpened, I think, by making a headline of the strong point, which is that your store is the only place that sells this particular kind of krout. "Did You Say Sour Krout?" means any old sour krout and doesn't give you the benefit of the exclusive proposition which you seem to have. "The Only Place in York Where You Can Buy Real German Sour Krout," is a little long, but it tells the story, and I should have used it.

The balance of the advertisement is little more than a price-list. A cut price-list, it is true, but all the same, I should have thrown in a word or two to make it stronger, as you have done with loose rolled oats, for instance. Even if you have nothing to say but adjectives—"fine," or "splendid," or "unusual" or "delicious"—it is better to say them than to say nothing but the name and the price. "Nice fine raisins, 8 cents," may be the biggest bargain in the United States, but who is going to know it unless you say something to indicate it? Something to indicate that they are regular 10 cent raisins or much b ter than average 8-cent raisins.

answer to the question re- l to in the contest: How many nally advertised goods can a er afford to sell and charge the to service? In the first place 't believe in doing business on nprofitable basis and charging to something else. All Na- lly advertised goods pay at enough to justify a merchant ndle them, but the point is can we get away from hand- them altogether and replace with equally as good goods show a larger profit? In my it is not a question of how many can he afford to handle? It is a case of how many does he really have to handle? The articles I really have to handle would be entirely different from the fellow, say, in Philadelphia. You take, for instance, B. T. Babbitt's soap. It is Nationally advertised, and yet here in Pittsburg you don't really have to handle it, but in Philadelphia in a good many stores they do, and with some other goods vice versa.

In summing it all up I would say let each man size up his own situation and be a salesman instead of an automatic machine.

Yours for more profitable business.

By H. F. Granzow, Ashland, Pa.

In answer to article No. 4, which virtually means, how many unprofitable articles can a retailer afford to sell at a loss?

I would answer that with just one word of four letters, "none." I believe every article a grocer sells should pay a profit and help to bear its proportionate share of expense incurred to handle it, and yet while we know this is true, or should be, we don't always practice what we preach. Why, because we think circumstances and our competitors won't let us. Lack of business qualification, indifference and ignorance, all caused because the grocery business is composed of a heterogeneous lot of men and women, all of different views, many opinions, and few convictions.

I don't believe in selling one thing below cost and another at exorbitant prices to make up the loss, even if some are successful on that line. If we all did that and the consumer got next he would be able to buy all or everything below cost, and we would all be in a hole or working for glory.

I have been a long time in business and always open to opportunities to make or do more business, but always for a fair profit. This handling this or that article for nothing or, as some call it, advertising, or cost of service, don't cut any figure. You all know when you give trading stamps that it costs you 4 per cent. and, added to your already gross expenses, make you dishonest to get it back. All this not about giving goods away in lieu of legitimate advertising doesn't hold for long. Keep posted, keep good goods, ask fair profit, advertise in your local paper, is the most lasting road to success.

The old fogy idea of selling sugar as a leader should be relegated to oblivion and the merchant who doesn't make a fair profit on sugar to-day is not true to himself.

If you sell any article at cost your conscience gets rubber-like; you rob Peter to pay Paul; overcharge your best customers to the benefit of profitless ones. Anyway, it's wrong to charge "profit" to cost of service; better to charge service to expense account or the cost of the goods. Hoping I have expressed my views why no advertised article that doesn't pay a profit could afford to be sold, handle it in a business way and it will pay a profit or ultimately die out.

By Solomon Mann, Plainfield, N. J.

If it (an unprofitable Nationally advertised article) should not be thrown out of stock, how far should selling such unprofitable articles go? In other words, how many such unprofitable articles can a retailer afford to sell and charge to loss of service? I would say to do the square deal to yourself and your trade; you cannot afford to sell one (1) article unprofitable and charge the loss to service. When you go to sell unprofitable articles and charge to loss of service then you will find that your service, without charging loss of unprofitable articles, are as high as they can be. But at present we all know that there are lots of storekeepers or merchants in business that are selling many Nationally advertised articles at a great loss just to make believe to some of the public that by selling the few specials of Nationally advertised goods they sell all the others at the same rate, but this is not the case at all, and to illustrate to you my argument and point I will show you what experience I had last week with one of my customers here. One of the big department stores of New York that is in the hands of the receivers had between its grocery specials 2 boxes of Uneeda biscuits for 5 cents. When this particular party saw the ad. she thought that I was robbing her here all the time by charging her 5 cents for Uneeda biscuit, so she made up her mind to take a trip to the bargain store 25 or 30 miles from my place and buy some of her groceries there. She left an order for several dollars' worth of groceries and upon receiving and looking over the prices on the other things (not advertised) she found that she overpaid on her purchase about 50 to 75 cents over the regular prices that I have been charging her and against their special prices. I can bet you a cigar or a drink that any of her sisters or friends or herself will never go after the bargain of 2 boxes of Uneeda biscuits for 5 cents again, and I must say frankly and admit that every time any of the chain stores, department stores or cut-price stores that are knocking the d—— out of the Nationally advertised article they are doing more harm than good to themselves, and the merchants that are watching their business very close can see that the fellow that cuts his throat in cutting Nationally advertised goods is losing out and we gain by it. This is just one single instance of last week, but we see them often; they are not new to you or me.

In closing my letter will say that if there are some Nationally advertised goods that you have to keep and sell without making a profit, keep them in stock and avoid their sale as much as possible.

Thanking you for the space given me in your valuable paper.

Wish you success with your new name "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

By Harry Matchett, with Huey & Mathews, 1027 Lang Avenue, Pittsburg, Pa.

Question No. 4 "condensed." How many Nationally advertised articles can a merchant afford to handle, and charge the loss if any to service? Now we will first have to ascertain what loss if any we sustain in selling these goods before we can arrive at a definite conclusion as to how many lines we should carry. Therefore we will select four of the most prominent, four of the most knocked and four of the most called for. Now let us see, Shredded Wheat costs $1.20 per dozen, retails as a general rule for 12 cents a package; here we have a gross profit of 20 per cent.; Mother's Oats cost around 96 cents a dozen, retails for 10 cents a package, gross profit of 24 per cent.; Kellogg's Corn Flakes cost 93 cents a dozen, retails at 10 cents a package, a gross profit of 27 per cent.; Uneeda Biscuits cost 50 cents a dozen, retails at 5 cents a package, a gross profit of 20 per cent. On three of these we have a small discount for cash, on the fourth a larger discount for cash. I believe we can safely take these four as an average of the Nationally advertised goods and we find an average gross profit of about 23 per cent. Allowing a 15 per cent. basis for operating expenses we find we have a clear net profit of 8 per cent. Some good merchant, more thoughtful perhaps for the "dear" public's interest than his own, will probably tell us he sells Kellogg's or Mother's Oats 3 for 25 cents. Now who asks him to do this? Not the people back of these goods; in fact, they are deeply interested in having the retailer sell at a straight price. We tried the "financial suicide" game here for quite a spell, that is 3 for 25 cents; got wise, decided on a straight 10-cent price. Result, we find we sell just as many of these goods as before. At first some of our customers, those in the habit of buying Kellogg's 3 for 25 cents, demurred a little and instead of the usual 3 packages for 25 cents decided they would only take two. Now we are never asked for the cut price. "My O" if sugar were only included among these Nationally advertised goods what a "wail" from the retailer, yet on he goes year in and year out selling it for nothing and less, and more, yes twenty times more of it than all the Nationally advertised goods combined. In contrast to the Nationally advertised goods, let us dissect the profit on bacon, eggs and cheese, all three staple sellers. Here we have an average net profit of about 15 per cent. "in figures," from which we must make a further reduction for the loss in bacon ends, mouldy cheese and broken eggs, etc., which of course reduces the net percentage. In the Nationally advertised goods we have no waste whatever to contend with, "quite an asset." Now after a careful scrutiny of the above I cannot for the life of me see why any retailer should cut off his nose to spite his face in limiting his stock in the sale of these goods. Eight per cent. clear profit is an item not to be scoffed at, also in limiting or eliminating the sale of some of these goods you also eliminate the sale of something else and in the end eliminate perhaps some of your customers, then what? "Nuf ced."

By H. F. Snyder, Sunbury, Pa.

A Nationally advertised, but unprofitable article, kept in stock should be sold whenever the finest diplomacy on the part of a clerk fails to persuade a customer to try something just as good. By this I mean there are many instances when persuasion with a customer is untactful and results in a loss of good feeling. It is bad business to let a customer see that what you want to sell her pays more profit than what she wants to buy, and that is the conclusion she usually jumps to.

A better plan is to make a window or counter display of the article you wish to substitute, which gives you a chance to explain its merits without a hint of persuasion.

It should also be sold whenever a child is sent for it. Substitution when children are the customers does not get you friends.

As a general rule it is your better class of trade which asks for a Nationally advertised article, and I think any retailer can afford to fill the demand, and there is a doubt in my mind whether in the end there really is any loss to charge to service, for it is bound to bring you trade for other goods as well.

By W. J. Gomminger, Easton, Pa.

In answer to the fourth question on Nationally advertised goods, I would say that unprofitable goods should be thrown out of stock, but with the competition and without the co-operation of your fellow grocer it is almost impossible, but only should be sold in absolute cases of necessity, by that I mean in order to keep the good will of the customer that insists upon it, that is a good patron of your store, and even then the clerk ought always try to sell her some good profitable article to try to balance profits. The amount of sales of such unprofitable goods should be as small per cent. as possible, and I would think the fixed amount could only be determined by the sale of other goods that it brought him and profits derived therefrom. Thinking this will give you my view of the matter, and if not composed properly help yourself.

By C. R. Breedin, Manning, S. C.

Persistent alertness is demanded of us if we would make good in the honorable calling of merchandising. Nowhere is there greater need for watchfulness than in the matter of profits on the goods we sell.

So far as selling the products of manufacturers who arbitrarily set their prices to yield us only our operating expenses or less, I make it a principle in the conduct of my business to discourage and whenever possible kill the sale of these goods.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire." Lawyers, preachers, teachers and people of ability in other walks of life demand and receive remuneration for their services; why shouldn't the man who sells, works as hard and risks more, come in for his share also?

With the devil's insidiousness unprofitable goods have the knack of getting into our stores; there se to be a dozen ways for letting t in for every one to keep them however, it's up to the manage a well regulated business to these unprofitables on the jump to guard against admitting oth Some job this is, too.

You ask, "how many such profitable articles can a retailer ford to sell and charge the los service"? I answer, not a si one, especially if by so doing further the interests of selfish m ufacturers in acting as their tributors and furnishing a lot free advertising for them, only strengthen their already too sec position.

As a business proposition we ill afford to handle any such goo though we all more or less hav to do. The way to figure on h many unprofitable goods you afford to sell is to face the fact t you are going to fire 'em all o least greatly minimize their s then quietly proceed to execute decision.

We cannot summarily throw every unprofitable article—some may never get rid of complet but, just as sure as "constant d ping wears away the stone," so s will intelligent application, plus purpose, thin out the crop of leec we have to contend with. W we've done our best at thinning these glory-for-handling free vertising parasites we should sure to start all over again, like nut-grass and suckers, they a mighty prolific set.

Any article netting less than per cent. on the sale I consider profitable, and it would have to "some pumpkin" of a trade get for me not to hop on it and m the life out of it. Goods that yi 20 per cent. on the sale price I c sider 'pot boilers" or even bre ers, though our expense of do business does not quite reach t figure. This method is only to p safe.

Anything yielding us in exc of 20 per cent. on selling pri are given due consideration by corps of intelligent and effici salesmen, which means that we these goods.

Quite a good preventive of much unprofitable goods in stores would be to fight shy of many free deals, especially wh new goods are being put in. Pri with the so-called free goods probably all right, but when s n our own city—"renowned the cery business, selling a full line other items to make up a come stock, priced, where it was sible, lower than his competitors, would flourish and result in a permanent success. It was something like a year ago when this idea was conceived and the business started; not a month ago he was closed up by his creditors with liabilities of about $4,000 and little assets.

Here was a fair business man, selling on terms of cash, having moderate expenses (compared with other dealers with a similar location), enjoying a considerable volume of business, making a hopeless failure. To those who know most about the circumstances it seems plain that the great "leak" in this case was not what should be termed leak, but a "lack" of profit. He had his full share of Nationally advertised goods and supplemented that advertising in the local papers. He advertised that he had Nationally advertised goods. He was optimistic and got business; and the more he got the worse off were his creditors, for he was distributing their goods, without chances of his paying for them.

As stated he was a good business man (gone wrong). He was not a magician or supernatural. He could not perform miracles by paying out when he sold his goods at a price that failed to return him the necessary profit to make good his expenses and pay his "invoices."

We will leave you here to figure out how else this failure could have been than that of short profits.

Your new name is an improvement, and we wish you continued success.

By Geo. W. Kappelt, Erie, Pa.

There should be no limit to the sale of Nationally advertised goods when there is a steady demand. Some goods are highly advertised and still do not sell; these of course should be allowed to slip away entirely. If an article is a snappy, quick seller known to almost everyone, and still the profit is so small you think it unprofitable to sell, then sell more than ever and make it worth while. Last week we made a special on a certain highly advertised coffee. The article generally sells for 30 cents and this makes a very small profit for the retailer. Our special price was 27 cents, cutting the profit almost entirely off. We sold five times as much of this coffee in one week than we ever sold in six weeks' time before. Our profit on the whole was fine; it fig-

Baking Powders That Leaven Your Stock

In a way, the baking powder that a grocer puts forward leavens his whole stock. Look at his leading brand and you can pretty well tell what his whole stock is like.

The grocers who put Rumford Powders forward are always fine, substantial merchants, for the people who use Rumford Powders are apt to be fine, substantial people. Rumford Powders are splendid merchandise from every standpoint; they are clean, wholesome combinations of food substances (phosphates, starch and soda), and they always do their work of leavening beautifully.

ured much better than you would imagine. The goods of other kinds that were carried along with this coffee were the bread winners. Almost every article that we handle that is a Nationally advertised article gets its time on our special sales sheets. We have some good article on sale every day. Up until a few years ago I thought it looked pretty nice to see my name on all kinds of goods (private brands), but now I know different from experience.

Goods that are known to the consumer are the goods I like to sell and do sell. I am very much indebted to Nationally advertised goods; they have been the means of building up my business from a small store to a prominent business place on one of our principal business streets, and so naturally I am quite enthusiastic over this line. And having had the practical experience with unknown brands and Nationally advertised brands, I think I am justified in saying what I do in their behalf. I used to buy a cocoa of my own brand. If I sold it the same as Baker's or any other good brand I would have made an elegant profit on each and every can. But it did not sell so quickly and easily as I was told it would. Every can needed an explanation and finally I reduced it (this after about fifteen months' handling), so I made less than I would had I sold the good old Nationally advertised W. Baker's or a lot more that are real sellers. So it was with a good many brands of goods and kinds of staples without a reputation working behind each and every article. You might ask what is there in a trade-mark or a registered brand? Everybody from baby to grandpa knows what Uneeda biscuits are. A competitor of the firm that owns this brand was asked to sell all rights to this word Uneeda. They valued this word at one million dollars a letter or six million dollars for the word.

There are all kinds of good crackers in the market, but only one has the magic word Uneeda. If it is worth six million dollars to the National Biscuit Co., why should it not be worth a little to the grocer? Surely it is a credit to any live grocer to have the privilege of selling an article of this kind and placing his store in the quality class. Profits are a fine thing, but I would rather work on volume and give satisfaction to the trade that are making my business what it is day. Some grocers and tea coffee men claim different; they a rule, give checks, stamps or miums with their various goods are no better off than the man handles a quality line—both w for volume. I asked about a h dred or more people I knew w buying Larkin goods if they wo buy the Larkin products if they ceived no premiums, and every answered in the negative. The asked if they would buy the go at half price without a premi and just exactly two said t would. I make as attractive a play of popular Nationally ad tised goods as I know how keep them always moving and have my trade realize the differe in a quality article and a premi article.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

Don't Say "I."—We were on our way to New York and the third party had the "I" habit. Said he, at one stage of the conversation, "I do just as much business in that town now as I did before my competitors opened."

Said a merchant, "Why do you employ the word 'I,' why not say 'we'?" The merchant was a chain store man and instantly he gave me a topic for this week's "Straight Talks."

While the merchant was big enough to eliminate himself, the salesman must be big enough to include himself.

Always say "we."

"They" did it or that's "their" method or "their" policy is so and so, separates you from "their policy."

Be one of the firm—in spirit. Let the reality take care of itself.

You are an important part of the success of the man you are working for. Every time you fail in efficiency you detract just as much from his success as well as yours.

Every time you make a clean cut efficient record of your work you add just that much to the advancement of two parties—you and him.

It's a mutual affair in business, just as it is at home. What effects the one effects the other.

When the wife calls you down for leaving a gas jet going in an unoccupied room she doesn't enlarge on "my" expense, but she just emphasizes the pronoun "our."

Coming to the broader sense of the term "we," we can apply it to the public.

Everybody is "we" when you rightly understand it.

"The Public Be Damned" is outrageous.

Isn't is a fine thing to work in a store where the patrons of that store give and receive the home atmosphere?

When you diffuse that atmosphere you are doing good work. When you are "we" with your firm and "we" with the supporters of that firm you are a good man.

Clever salesmanship is a fine thing. A knowledge of the business is a fine thing. Courtesy and personality are all fine things, but believe me, no attribute goes before a heart interest in your work—a real "we" in the true sense of the term.

Get imbued with that—fell it and act it in every transaction and your future success is sure.

I write this not from theory, not from sentiment, but from actual daily and yearly experience, from an "apprentice" to manager, believing that the spirit that applies in hundreds of cases will ply in your case.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

There is still a fair business doing every day in the tea market. No large lots are moving, but buyers are taking stock right along for immediate wants. Prices are about unchanged, but as reported last week, low grade Ceylons are gradually working up by reason of scarcity, and this has strengthened low grade Congous, which are accepted as a substitute.

Coffee.

The coffee market is in a somewhat peculiar position. Options are very weak and soft, and have declined to about the low point of last August. Actual Rio and Santos coffee, on the other hand, are about ½ cent above the option basis. This is caused, however, by relative scarcity of good drinking grades, notably of Santos. Prices are unchanged for the week. Mild coffees are firm and perhaps a shade higher for the week. The demand is good. Java and Mocha are unchanged and quiet. Old style brown steamer Java is about exhausted and commands a premium.

Sugar.

There has been no actual change in refined sugar during the week. The market for granulated ranges from 4 cents to 4.10, according to the refiner. No Philadelphia refiner will sell at 4 cents. Most of the refiners have shut down for the time, or are working part time. Raw sugar was sold at a small fraction off during the week, as the time approaches (March 1st) when the duty is automatically reduced. The demand for sugar is light, as everybody seems to be expecting lower prices.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is unchanged and seasonably active. Sugar syrup is dull and molasses fairly active at ruling prices.

Fish.

Mackerel is somewhat firmer as Lent opens, and some holders are predicting an advance. Supplies are small. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and in fair demand; prices firm. Salmon of all grades quiet at ruling prices. Domestic sardines unchanged, firmly held and scarce. Imported sardines still very high because of scarcity. There are still some for sale, but at very firm prices.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are about where they were a week ago. The market is firm, but unchanged, both on 3s and 2s. The outlook is strong, and most holders are expecting an advance later in the season. With the tomato market, however, it is never safe to predict anything. Some future tomatoes are selling on a basis about 5 cents below last year. Corn and peas, both spot and future, are unchanged and in fair demand. Apples are higher and $3 for New York State gallons, in a large way, is now about the best. California canned goods are unchanged and quiet. Small Eastern staple canned goods are unchanged and in seasonable demand. String beans are very scarce and high, meaning particularly of Southern brands.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged for the week, but higher prices are not unlikely, as stocks are low. The demand is fair. Peaches and apricots are quiet and unchanged. Raisins are where they were a week ago, with a fair demand. Currants and other dried fruits unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are unchanged, the spot price being slightly above the quotation to come forward. Marrows are unchanged and seasonably active. California limas are scarce on spot and high at the advances recently reported. In fact supplies everywhere are low. Green and Scotch peas dull and weak.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady and unchanged, with only a moderate consumptive demand. A seasonable increase in the demand is looked for, but probably without any advance of consequence. Under grades are in ample supply and selling prices about unchanged.

Butter.

The receipts of butter have been curtailed by the weather, while the demand has increased. The result is an advance of 1 cent per pound on fancy stock. Under grades and storage creamery are in ample supply and the market is only steady. Probably the consumption will soon still further increase, and the market may show a still further advance on all fresh creamery.

Eggs.

The cold spell has interfered with egg shipments everywhere and the market is being lightly supplied at 2 cents advance. The receipts up to now have cleaned up on arrival, and as long as the weather continues extreme the market will be firm After conditions moderate and shipments begin to come forward there will probably be a decline.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats are firm and unchanged, with only a moderate consumptive demand. Pure lard is firm, with an increased demand at unchanged prices. Compound lard is only steady at a decline of ⅛ cent; demand moderate. Dried beef, canned meats and barreled pork in fair demand at unchanged prices.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

Prices on evaporated apples hold steady here, with a fair demand. Desirable qualities are being cleaned up pretty closely.

Cold storage prime, in 50-pound boxes, is held at 8¼ to 8⅜ cents, with 1913 crop prime at 8½ to 8⅝ cents.

Choice is quotable at 9¼ to 9½ cents, with strictly fancy held at up to 13 cents.

These prices are all for 50-pound boxes, cartons ½ cent per pound higher.

Raspberries hold steady and are quotable at 23 to 23½ cents f. o. b. in barrels.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The Holland herring situation is just right. Stocks here are comparatively very small. Shipments coming forward are not very large, and while prices here are vey low, the market is rather sustained. Demand is very good and will improve as the Lenten season advances. Consequently the Holland herring business is in good shape. This is really one of the few articles where the consumer has gotten the benefit of the lower or abolished du Thereby Holland herring a cheaper than they ever were befo

Norway herring continue in re ular hand-to-mouth demand, a stocks are not any larger than w be necessary to last until the e of the season.

Imported oil sardines continue very good demand, in fact bett demand than usual at this season the year. Of course there a hardly any French sardines to had, and the few that are on t market are held at very high pric and paid readily. Portuguese sa dines are selling very freely, a most shipments coming in are so on dock. Skinless and boneless sa dines are very scarce, and will n be available for another few mont when the fishing will start agai The situation in Norwegian sa dines has improved somewha There have been some fish caug in Norway, although not ve many, and prices paid have be abnormally high. Neverthele the importers have been only t anxious to get whatever they cou so as to be able to supply part the demand, which is getting larg every day.

Business in our line in gener is quite satisfactory, although course shipments have been han pered lately, owing to the inclem weather, but the outlook for sprin business is certainly excellent, a we anticipate a good and steady d mand for our goods. Stocks of a our goods are very moderate, a well as first and second hand which should make for a stea hand-to-mouth demand for goo in our line.

We Have Consistently Worked to Increase the Coffee Sales of our customers by every honorable method. Naturally some of our actions have been criticized by some good merchants, but we are quite sure that if they were in our position and had made the same study of the matter they would have done exactly as we did. We fully appreciate the right of every merchant to his own opinion, but in our business experience we find that different methods are needed in almost every State, as no one method is good everywhere. When customers who had been selling 100 lbs. of Coffee a week advised us that their sales had been reduced half or more by the various Stamp and Premium propositions, we changed our Coupon to a Stamp, that is all. There had never been any objection to the Coupon. The consuming public wanted Stamps, the Stamp was a quicker agency for getting results, and the large business we have on our Stamp Lines indicates clearly that we have made no mistake. Of course, it is for those merchants who want to use it, and it is that appeals to many merchants and thousands of consumers. It is a common thing to receive orders for 500 lbs. of Coffee and 300 lbs. of Tea from merchants who before using it could not sell more than 50 lbs. of Coffee or more than 30 lbs. of Tea in the same length of time. The line includes Tea, Coffee, Spice, Extracts and a number of other products in which are packed a liberal supply of Parke Stamps, so that it is a proposition of quality and Stamps combined that gives universal satisfaction. Why should you stand aside and permit carloads of profitable products to come into your localities from outside points every month? In fact, in a recent town that we developed, before going into it at all, we investigated this matter and found that a carload of Buffalo products came to this small town every month. That business was lost to the merchants of that community, and they are mighty glad to get hold of a just and honorable proposition like the Parke Stamp Lines to regain this lost trade. Isn't that a good stroke of business for the merchant?

Boots and Shoes

To Prevent Shoe Misbranding.

Congress will recast many of the so-called fabric bills which embody the proposed "pure shoe" legislation, so that they will meet what is intended to prevent the misbranding of goods and the selling of goods through misrepresentation. This is in line with the idea set forth in last week's issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," and the recommendations of shoe manufacturers and the National Retailers' Association. Congressman Rogers, of Massachusetts, has introduced a bill to this effect.

Easter Trade Already Booming.

Easter trade is a high peak in the year's transactions of the shoe line, and every effort is bent to get goods in the stock of merchants to meet the demand. In fact, if retailers are not prepared to place orders now or within a comparatively short time, they are likely to be in a bad position. Manufacturers and jobbers are hustling and their traveling staffs are out "beating the bushes" and corraling the game. Competition is sharp, but prices are firm, with leather quotations inclined to harden on account of the curtailed supply both in foreign and domestic hides.

An almost endless variety—in some minor details generally—of models are being shown merchants for the spring season. Weimer, Wright & Watkins, in talking with the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" recently, said, "We find business steady, almost normal would better express it. The Easter trade is now occupying our time and attention, and dealers who do not get in their stock pretty soon will be in anything but an enviable position; that is, if they expect to do any kind of a business with women. The dominant style for women's fine footwear is patent leather, with black cloth tops, and they are given the preference by merchants. Prices are steady, on account of the firm leather market.

"Constant change in styles is the bugbear of the shoe manufacturer, and we must meet the call for new patterns in the same complacent frame of mind in which other manufacturers do. In short, unless fresh, seasonable designs are not produced we get no trade; that is about the size of it. Men's wear does not vary so much as with women's goods, yet there is always a change of some kind in appearance, finish or lines. We are right now beginning to pass on the designs for our fall lines, and along in August they will be ready to be shown retailers for the ensuing season's buying."

Average Expense of Doing Business as Learned from Six Hundred and Fifty Retail Stores.

Of direct interest to shoe retailers is the second bulletin, issued last week, of the bureau of business research by the graduates' school of business administration of Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass. It deals specifically with the final form of a uniform accounting system for the trade, which is becoming standard with the merchant who is desirous of improving his methods by the most modern system. The report represents investigations in 650 shoe stores in twenty-six States and may be summarized as follows:—

Total operating expenses ranged from a very little less than 18 per cent. to 35 per cent. of the net sales, with the figures, as a whole, centering about 24 per cent. Here expense follows profits, and the stores selling the higher grades of shoes cost more to operate. Freight and cartage and interest are not included in operating expenses. Very few stores kept items of buying expense, and it figures negligibly in the bulletin, but it is estimated to be about 1.1 per cent. of the net sales.

Advertising ranges from 0 to 8.8 per cent., with the greatest concentration between 1 and 2 per cent. Delivery expense is comparatively light, averaging about 0.6 per cent.

The number of stock turns, perhaps the most important item of all, range from 1.0 to 3.6 times. It seems to center about 1.8, and there are a sufficient number at 2.5 to warrant accepting this figure as a reliable standard. These figures mean that a store was encountered where the stock was turned over but once a year, while another turned it as many as 3.6 times. The majority turned their stock a little less, twice.

It is found that clerks on men's shoes attain a higher average in selling than those who sell women's shoes, figuring on general stocks. In ascertaining profits, gross or net, every item of expense was eventually accounted for, including bad debts, interest, taxes, insurance, heat, light and power, discounts, depreciation, etc.

The bulletin strongly recommends a closer application to business system in the shoe trade; there is much waste that could be taken up to the profit of the retailer.

Accompanying the bulletin are several forms designed to show how to arrive at the results of the business by short cuts. The entire system of accounting is complete and practical, and requires the average daily use of no more than seven accounts, with an average weekly use of six other accounts. It has been prepared after three years of research, and is offered to the shoe trade as correct in theory and practice.

Shoe Buying Unusually Conservative.

New business, a correspondent writes, is slow in the New York market among the manufacturers, though they are reported fairly busy on orders booked some time back. Jobbers are not wholly neglecting the market, but as there is the same conservative buying movement that has been in progress with retail merchants in general for some weeks, wholesalers are acting in keeping therewith, as their contracts are for limited quantities. The question of styles continues to hamper trading to quite an extent and until jobbers are convinced which are to be the proper models, they will probably continue to operate sparingly. This moot question will not be definitely settled until after the travelers report on the preferences of the retailers in their preliminary canvass.

On the other hand, manufacturers—pending the arrival of these returns, to some extent—state they are not particularly anxious to book business too far ahead, for with hides and leather still strong and advancing, they are likewise conservative in their purchase of material. The same situation is reflected in other manufacturing shoe centers, namely, Boston, Brockton, Lynn, Haverhill, Rochester, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Hanover and Harrisburg, Pa.; Columbus and Portsmouth, Ohio; Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago and Milwaukee.

At some points "where the shoes come from" reports are to the effect that makers are getting reorders on certain lines of Colonial pumps, which means that for the summer season they will be popular sellers. A further point is that buyers prefer wood heels on women's wear instead of what is known as the "leat Louis" description, though latter are cheaper. This pre ence would be a knockout for advocates of the "pure sh bills, who are declaiming railing against alleged deterio ing leather "substitutes" with knowing precisely what they "hollering" about. These qu tionable efforts are aided abetted by the yellow pr which is always ready and w ing to play upon general mis formation and lack of knowled by distortion and mis-statem in order simply to start son thing. This is a digression, ho ever, in referring to the goo that are in current demand by tailers. As above stated, it mak clear that business is movi along with the patterns of s sonable goods approved and cepted.

Little change is noted duri the week in the Boston mark Retail trade has not expanded shown much inclination to d play spring lines owing to t unusually cold weather. Man facturers throughout New En land complain of a lack of ne business, but plants are runnin to fair capacity.

As was emphatically predicte by E. C. Simmons, the wide known founder of the Simmo Hardware Co., St. Louis, Mo., wh is still an active factor in the bus ness despite his 75 years, graceful borne, trade is increasing in vo ume and prosperity as never bef in the industrial and commerci world. Sales managers of the var ous branches in New York, Phil delphia, Toledo, Minneapolis, Sio City and Wichita, Kan—strict wholesale—report excellent sal with bright prospects for the fu ture. Prices are firm in all line and with the price of raw materi unchanged no revision of quotatio is anticipated or may be looke for, the new tariff act notwit standing.

Bad Storms Hurt Business.

An Eastern jobber of note—rather the president of the company—in a discursive chat on conditions, prospects and prices, had this to say to a representative of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World": "If it had not been for the recent storm business for spring would have opened up in good form. As it is, quietness would be the proper word to apply. Instead of having our twelve men out calling on the retail merchants, they are at home awaiting further instructions.

"Nothing has been selling but snow shovels, picks, etc., goods we had about stored away until next winter and we were obliged to bring them out again. Prices have an upward tendency and are steady and firm. Yes, the new tariff will cut some figure in hardware, but that was discounted, and as yet the foreign manufacturer has not materialized, let alone captured the market. Of course, the threat of his coming here caused some alarm, which has not entirely subsided. In certain lines prices were revised to meet any competition from that quarter, and it still must be guarded against in some manner. It would never do to have the alien manufacturer come into the American market. Hardware manufacturers and jobbers should and will meet the issue squarely and fairly. Foreign made goods have now an advantage never enjoyed before since our manufacturers developed their lines, improved their product and increased their output up to the present standard. The heavy goods will doubtless be affected more than any other. There is no trick in manufacturing the heavy weights and in the course of the next few months we will know where we stand, at least on these lines."

Well-known Road Man Dies.

Saturday, February 21st, William J. Maharg, a well-known figure in California and Eastern hardware circles, died at his home in Alameda, Cal., aged fifty-five years. Ten years ago the deceased became the Western representative of the John H. Graham Hardware Co., New York, traveling out of Chicago to the coast. Subsequently he located permanently in California, still preserving his business connections, and as a salesman the late Mr. Maharg was widely known and highly esteemed in the trade. Early in his hardware career Mr. Maharg was with John G. Brenner, Sons & Co., Philadelphia, where he will be buried, the body arriving Saturday last.

Hardware Men Taking on Talking Machines.

Western merchants are investigating and embarking in the sale of talking machines. The retailer in the small town that does not boast of a dealer in these popular sellers may make suitable terms to qualify as a regular dealer through the territorial jobber or manufacturer direct, though the latter will not supply the stock—machines, records, needles, accessories and literature. Only three manufacturers are known, that is, either through the control of certain essential patents or the exchange of manufacturing licenses. Their National advertising has been liberal—appearing with their announcements in all the leading magazines, periodicals and newspapers. This policy, which is never relaxed, has made their goods familiar to the public, and therefore the dealer finds the handling of either one of the lines comparatively easy—a ready market at hand.

The hardware retailer is a natural distributor of talking machines and the manufacturer and jobber offer strong and effective co-operation if the representation is adequate and the methods aggressive. Western hardware dealers frankly say that talking machines are great sellers in farming communities, especially, farmers purchasing the high-price machines without hesitation, as they seem familiar with their superior merit through the advertising mentioned. One dealer said, when asked if he sold many machines, "Well, I should say so. I am selling them to farmers right along, and have placed a nice assortment of them in this community. The lowest price machine sold is $27.50 and the best $200, and I have disposed of a large number ranging between those figures during the past year."

Vanadium in Hardware is a Trade Name.

Vanadium, as applied to hardware—lawn mower blades, saws, etc.—is strictly a trade name and not descriptive literally of the articles to which the designation is attached. A prominent manufacturer, in reverting to the word, said to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," "While I do not pretend to be absolutely sure of the nature of vanadium from a scientific standpoint, I know it is expressive of hardness and has been adopted by the trade as a generic term. The deposits of the metal vanadium are small and are controlled by the French Government. Not an ounce of vanadium has been seen in this country for fully two years."

Dry Goods and Notions

Wholesale Men Who Go on the Road Themselves.

Optimistic as to the late spring and fall trade the notion houses have prepared for a full campaign, and are entering upon it with zeal and energy. Jobbers calling on the retail trade, with a specialty of merchants outside the large centres, are sending their travelers out with every confidence that orders will be up to mark in point of number, quantity and aggregate value. To be sure, with the constant disturbing reports emanating from no one knows where, but disquieting nevertheless, manufacturers and jobbers in hosiery, underwear, laces, ribbons, novelties, etc., have been proceeding cautiously, unless they were fortified by first hand information that strengthened them in formulating a buying and selling policy in keeping therewith.

Doubtless not a few prominent firms in every section of the country have not only gauged their activities either from the reports of their road men, or have gone over the territory in person for that purpose. The latter plan was followed by Albert Sullivan, of Sullivan Bros., who visited towns of any size or importance through the South to Florida and then back via the Atlantic seaboard States. He was away several weeks, and on ret ing was satisfied the spring and business would be satisfactory, arrangements for stock in all t varied lines were completed. year's sales exceeded those 1912, and so far in 1914 the rec has gone ahead of the same tim 1913. General Business and What the Markets Are Doing.

Owing to the holiday, generally observed in many of the jobbing centres, business suffered a slight halt, with the widespread storms throughout the Middle West and Eastern States also a deterrent. The road men have been hampered on this score, as their reports to headquarters indicate. In cotton goods trading was irregular for the week. Buyers all over the country, including both jobbers and retailers, are waiting for lower prices on these lines, though the middlemen are selling spot goods for full prices.

As large a fall trade as they had a year ago has been entered up by manufacturers of percales in the New York market. A large demand for printed crepes is in evidence. The demand is strong for fine fancy domestic worsted dress goods. Not for many years, a correspondent says, have distributors and retailers of dress goods had a chance like the present for buying high grade wool products at such favorable prices. Higher prices prevail in men's wear, the reduction of quotations by the manufacturers to meet the threatened lower prices of foreign competition expected under the new tariff, having been found inadvised. The lower prices are not in sight. In other words, the price situation is quite firm.

Plain cloths of quality, printed silk and cottons, are being asked for by merchants for the late spring and summer. The preponderance of choice being for the neat floral effects. Many of these cloths on light, sheer grounds are to be worn over combination underwear of similar weight silk and cotton for summer. This development is also accountable for the renewed interest shown in fine cambrics and long cloths for undergarments. The large selling printed cloths are the crepes and checks, which also hold good many ratines and plaids. Goods of fine weave of a crepe character are being bought liberally under the guise of printed crepons by retailers.

Manufacturers of men's wear have advanced prices within the past ten days, running from 2½ to 10 cents a yard on serges. On heavyweight suitings a mark up of from 2½ to 5 cents a yard was announced. Prices generally showed an upward tendency. In silk hosiery a satisfactory immediate business is reported, but advance orders are not anything what they should be. Sales to retailers show a good proportion of colors, a representative order showed a total of one-third in white, about a fifth black, and the remainder in the newer shades, such as taupe, emerald green, purple, American beauty, etc. Standard lines, however, are not being ordered from first hands as confidently as they were a year ago.

Light initial orders only were placed by merchants for fall delivery, and the buying is reported more irregular in women's than men's goods, in the latter union suits have a preference in underwear. Orders on voiles continue good and they are perhaps as good sellers as the crepes and veil cloths. Fancy goods in gray on the rough weaves have fallen off somewhat.

In the Philadelphia market jobbers look for a higher price in heavyweights on the rising cost of raw material; at least, an advance on what is now being quoted. There is a tendency toward better-made material and lighter weights in worsted goods, and away from cheap shoddy and cotton mixed fabrics toward knit goods. In linens the new tariff is considerably in favor of foreign made goods, equal to about 20 per cent. on most grades. The buying, however, has been conservative. Dress goods, hosiery, underwear and the general line of notions are moving into hands of the retail merchant at normal figures, and the buying is fair.

Marshall, Field & Co., Chicago, in their weekly review of the dry goods market, say: "Some very substantial contracts have been made with the larger buyers of general merchandise for fall delivery. On a number of lines sales show an increase over last year at the same date; but it is evident merchants are exercising caution in placing their fall business. Spring business has not opened up as strong as a year ago, due to Easter coming later and the unpropitious weather."

An advance of 2½ cents a yard has been announced by manufacturers on messalines over that of early spring quotations for fall delivery. If the taffeta vogue continues manufacturers of staple messaline silks state the demand for those goods will necessarily affect the distribution of the satin cloth. It is generally believed that the buying of taffetas and messalines to merchants will be about equally divided.

Frisoline, a new weave in French dress goods, will be shortly offered for fall delivery. This fabric is so made that it cannot slip on the warp or ruff up; the weave is firm, which assumes excellent wearing qualities, is pliable, and comes 47 and 51 inches wide. A prominent manufacturer opened last week his new fall lines of dress goods, including, besides the regular serge numbers, in dress goods, herringbones, gavrites, ottomans, gaberdines, poplins and crepes. On standard plain cloths reductions have been made in keeping with the lower wool and yarn prices as compared with last year's quotations.

CCXLVIII.—A Retail Dealer Who Signed a Contract Without Reading It and the Position He is in as a Result.

Here is a case that happened to a Philadelphia furniture dealer last week. It is typical of what may happen to any kind of a business man in any State, and the recital of it may therefore be helpful. No peculiar State statutes are involved—only fundamental principles which would be the same in any State.

This furniture dealer, singularly enough, had been debating in his own mind, a plan of representing the Grand Rapids Furniture Co. in his suburban neighborhood. It seems that this company issues catalogues from which a retailer can take orders without stocking the goods.

While he was turning the thing over in his mind, a well-dressed salesman called one day and claimed to be representing the Grand Rapids Furniture Co. Naturally he received a welcome and found it easy to work the scheme he went there to work. The retailer applied for some catalogues and the salesman agreed to furnish them, but said that his company gave catalogues only to retailers who would buy certain postal cards and distribute them, announcing that they were headquarters for Grand Rapids furniture. This seemed reasonable, and the retailer agreed at once to take a thousand cards, the price of which was to be $10. The salesman on his part agreed to send the catalogues, and was just leaving, when apparently as an after thought, he asked the retailer to sign a "little memorandum" of the order. As a matter of fact the little memorandum was a long and closely printed document, but the dealer trustingly signed it without reading it, especially as the salesman was waiting with his hat and coat on, evidently in a hurry.

A week or so later the retailer received word from a railroad company that there was a box for him, and in due course of time this was delivered. It proved to contain 12,000 postal cards, 1,000 for each month, all printed and ready for a year's campaign. Accompanying them was a bill for $120, which was really only half the expenditure involved, as the postals had to be mailed under one cent stamps. There were no catalogues, and no mention of any. In fact the concern that sent the cards proved to be a printing house up in New York State.

The retailer promptly sent back 11,000 cards with a check for $10. The cards were refused and are now being held by the express company for whoever may be found to be the owner. In a letter to the printing house the retailer told the whole story of the transaction, precisely as I have told it here, but the printers disavowed all knowledge of any fraud, said that they had every confidence in their salesman, who had never done such a thing before, and that so far as they were concerned the transaction was a straightforward and bona fide one. Moreover they should hold the retailer to it, and if he did not take the cards they would sue him. Whether they will do it remains to be seen, but the retailer is much perturbed about it, and even if nothing comes of it it will have been an unpleasant experience. Certainly an experience to avoid if possible.

Now what is this retailer's position? From his standpoint the case is one in which he was induced by a gross fraud to sign a contract far different from what he thought it was. He cannot understand how there can be any doubt about it, but nevertheless there is a very great doubt. From the printers' standpoint—I am assuming now that they were not parties to the fraud—it is a case of a bona fide, clear, straightforward written contract for 12,000 cards, which they have furnished, presumably in exact accordance with the specifications. The contract is signed by the man who now seeks to escape from it, and it contains the usual provision that the parties have no verbal understandings which contradict the printed word. Courts are very loath to release a man who signs a printed contract under conditions like these. They believe that a business man careless enough to put his name to a long printed paper without reading it, and with no guide except the word of a stranger that he never saw up to half an hour before, deserves to be punished so he will know better next time. I feel much inclined to agree with them.

Is there any chance of escape for this retailer, if suit is brought? There is some chance, but it is by no means bright. He admits signing an order for 12,000 cards, and certifying by his signature that the whole contract was in the printed form, and there was nothing outside of it. He now says the transaction was quite different, and that he was induced to sign by fraud, and so on, but the cases all answer: "Even if there was fraud, it did not go so far as to prevent you from reading the paper before you signed it. It was in your hands—you could have read it, and if you had read it, you would have known at once that the salesman was attempting to deceive you. That you did not read it is your own fault, and you rather than the salesman's innocent employer, must suffer the consequences."

The only defense that could be offered here is that the salesman's representation that he had authority to represent the Grand Rapids Furniture Co. and his promise to furnish catalogues, and to allow retailer to represent the comp in the taking of orders, was a lateral contract or inducement the strength of which only, he executed the written cont Further, that the salesman, by stating the contents of the wr contract, and betraying him signing without reading by fessing to be in a hurry, had plied the retailer with a good excuse for not reading the p before he signed it. With this fense I suppose he may have a five chances out of ten of esca judgment for the $120 and cos

I do not recall at the moment stronger lesson as to the imp tive importance of reading and reading, before signing, every p offered for one's signature.

Why Can't We Call Our Goods by Their Honest Names?

D'ye know, I've got a hunch that the fellow who got up the word Uneeda has brought more gray hair into the world than everybody else put together.

Since that word Uneeda came out there's been a million people working to get up something else as slick. They ain't any of 'em done it, but what they have done is to bring out a lot of awful things that a fellow has to stand on his head to say, some of 'em. And more people are trying all the time, that's the worst of it.

Only the other day I went into the store of a customer of mine and noticed on his desk a bunch of papers all covered with marks that didn't mean anything to me.

"What are you trying to do there?" I said. "Practice writing somebody's name so's you can forge a check?"

"I'm working on a new name for a brand of tea I'm going to have packed under my own label."

"What kind of tea is it?"

"It's a Ceylon."

"Well, why in thunder don't you call it Jones' Ceylon Tea?" I said. "That's what it is, ain't it?"

"We want a name like Uneeda," he said. "Something that will get people talking about it. My two daughters have been working on it now for a week, and they have thought up a lot of names, but I don't seem to like any of them. My wife says she's going at it pretty soon, and my 12-year-old kid dug at it all last evening."

"What's the matter with the clerks?" I said, "why don't you give them a hack?"

"Oh I am. They're working on it too. It seems as if all of us working together ought to strike something pretty soon."

"Why don't you call it Jones' Tee-hee?" I said.

"Poor joke," he said, "if it's intended to be one. If you think this is easy go at it yourself and see. It's the hardest job I ever tackled."

"I don't think it's easy," I said. "I don't think it's worth going after either. I believe in calling things by their right names. You'll sell just as much if the stuff is all right."

"No, people like clever stunts nowadays, you've got to give them something out of the ordinary to attract their attention," he said.

"Maybe I could dope out one," I said. "Gimme a piece of paper."

"If you can I'll buy you the best suit of clothes you ever had," he said.

It's some wonderful how I can dope out these things in a minute that other people can't do in a week.

"Here's your name," I said:—

JRWPNRRZYCK Tea

"What's that?" he said suspiciously after he had looked at it for a couple of minutes.

"It's plain enough, ain't it?" I said.

"Why I can't even pronounce it!"

"That ain't my fault, is it," I said.

"How do you pronounce it?"

"Right there's the point of the whole thing," I said. "It ain't meant to be pronounced. You say you want something that will make people talk. All right, that'll do it. They'll try to pronounce it, and after a week or so they'll give it up and think 'well, any fellow darn fool enough to get up a name like that wouldn't have the sense to cheat us by selling bad tea. I'll try some of it.'"

He caught on then right away.

"I might have known what I'd get from you," he said. Then he slung the slip of paper that I'd spent so much loving care on, clean across the room.

"You're a cruel devil," I

Two Lenten Displays

No. 1.

A fresh fish display will be a good window trim during Lent. This one illustrated is neat and attractive. To arrange this display, first cover the bottom of the window with light blue crepe paper. In the centre in front place a large sign card with wording as in illustration. Back of this, in the centre, place a large fish platter, on which display a large cleaned fish garnished with parsley and slices of lemon. At each side, a little towards the front, display, on small platters, steak cod and halibut garnished with lemon slices. At the rear place two forked saplings about three feet high. Place a straight stick across, on which suspend from fish hooks one of each kind of fish you have for sale, except the smelts. There should be about one dozen of them on a string. Place a little sawdust under them to absorb any dripping. Place two fishing rods across the forked saplings and a basket at each side, as in the illustration. Cover the entire rear with the light blue crepe paper. Change the fish often while selling. In that way they will always be fresh.

No. 2.

The macaroni and cheese display is arranged in the following manner. First cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. Along the front place nippy, Dutch, limburger, pineapple and snappy or club cheese. In the centre place a cream cheese with a large slice cut out and at each side place a piece of brick and some imported Switzer cheese. Use white paper napkins under the ch with parchment or butter paper to prevent the grease from spread over the bottom of the window. In the centre at the rear plac large pyramid of elbow macaroni and at each side place the lo macaroni, in packages, as illustrated. The large and small boxes t are set in are noodles. Place a small price tag on each arti Suspend a large sign card with words as in illustration.

As to Porto Rico Coffee.

The Chicago "Tribune" contained the following interesting comment recently on Porto Rico coffee, which is beginning to attain considerable importance in this country:—

OUR OWN COFFEE.

That "charity begins at home" has cocered some smug sins, but also some virtue. If it doesn't begin there, it is not likely ever to arrive there. In the field of trade the rule applies, and Mr. Mortimer Remington, commercial agent of Porto Rico, calls attention to the fact that within the confines of our own country, that is, in Porto Rico our fellow citizens are producing in limited but substantial quantities the finest coffee in the world. Most of this goes to Europe. Why not patronize a home industry? asks Mr. Remington.

This would seem to be not only patriotism, but enlightened self-interest, and the insular government is making virtue easy by sending sample tins of the coffee roasted and ready for use to any one who will send 4 cents to the Porto Rico Bureau of Information, 569 Fifth avenue, New York. The bureau also will send an illustrated book giving information about the island which all good Americans should be "up on."

If this be paternalism, let us make the most of it!

A Direct-Selling Window Display That Sold Goods

Description of the Display by the Man Who Made It, and Some Information as to What Goods It Sold and the New Customers It Got.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has obtained from W. Clyde Milby, who is connected with the retail sore of Lehman & Co., Trenton, N. J., a picture of a window display which belongs to the type we have many times discussed under the name of "direct selling windows;" that is, windows not meant solely to attract attention to the window, but to bring people in from the street and sell them goods. Mr. Milby has sent a photograph of the window and a detailed description of it.

The window follows the theme of an "old-fashioned window," and is thus described by its author:—

> The illustration shows an attractive window which can be used effectively on Washington's Birthday, during Old Home Week or the week following Thanksgiving.
> I call it an "old-fashioned window" from the fact that nothing shown therein is of the present-day method of hiding the goods and showing the label, but have shown the goods in the rough, as it were.
> The pictures and other antique articles were borrowed from an antique dealer, asking him at the time the value of each, and had signs made describing the article and the value named, viz., "A pair of old-fashioned hand-painted vases of Revolutionary days, valued at $200," and placed on each relic, except the pictures, as the photograph shows. This window is 16 feet long and but 26 inches deep. I commenced same by covering both ends of window to a height of five feet with white counter paper and covered, too, every box or tray used with the same paper, and then I placed the sides and first row in the order named—"reading from left to right"—Left side at bottom—pile of Arbuckle's coffee, with this sign, "Arbuckle's coffee, 25c. lb."
> Left side over coffee was nailed a whole boneless codfish, bearing this sign, "Boneless Codfish, the kind our mothers used, 15c. lb."
> For the bottom or first row I took a vegetable tray and filled it with black eyed peas, in which I had this sign, "Black Eyed Susans, 8c. lb."
> Box next on which I placed a 10-lb. kit of mackerel, with lid off; on the sign was, "Mackerel; grandfather bought these by the pail; this one $1.19."
> Now a tray filled with yellow corn meal, with this sign, "Indian Meal, 3c. lb.; 7 lbs. for 20c."
> Box on which was placed an old-fashioned fruit dish filled with oranges, a small sign, "Twenty for 25c." (instead of 15c. doz.).
> The sign on basket read, "Colonial Fruit Basket, valued at $50."
> Now a tray filled with steel cut oat meal, bearing this sign, "Ye olde time Oat Meal, 6c. lb." Next a box with a brown bowl filled with lard, sign reading, "Pure Lard, old-fashioned kettle rendered, 15c. lb." Next a tray filled with dark brown sugar, with sign, "Brown Sugar, 5c. lb."
> Box next, on which I placed an old-fashioned brown pitcher filled with cider, sign reading, "An old-fashioned pitcher filled with an old-fashioned drink, Pure Cider, 25c. gallon." Now a tray filled with marrowfat beans, with this sign, "Marrowfat Beans, the kind grandmother used to bake, 8c. lb." Now a box on which was placed an empty 5-gal. oil can, with this sign, "Koal Oile, now called Kerosene, 11c. gallon."
> On side directly above oil can I hung an old-fashioned looking glass, under which I had this sign, "A relic of Revolutionary days."
> All trays were at an angle of 15 degrees; the second row was about 15 inches high and 5 inches wide, on which I merely poured a scoopful of the goods used, at an equal distance apart.
> 1st.—A pile of soda crackers, with sign reading, "Old fashioned Soda Crackers, 8c. lb."
> 2d.—A pan of mush, sign reading, "Our grandfathers ate mush and milk and lots of it; this large package, 10c."
> 3d.—Pearl hominy, with this sign, "Pearl Hominy, the old-fashioned breakfast cereal, 4c. lb."
> 4th.—Whole wheat flour; sign reading, "Whole Wheat Flour, old-fashioned stone ground, 25c. bag."
> 5th.—Green coffee; sign reading, "Green Coffee, 28c. lb."
> 6th.—Ground salt; sign reading, "Ground Salt, formerly used for table and cooking purposes, now used for dairy and barn uses; bushel bag, 48c."
> 7th.—Exton's crackers; sign, "Old-fashioned Exton Crackers, 11c. lb."
> 8th.—Loose buckwheat; sign, "Old-fashioned buckwheat, 2 lbs. 9c.; 6 lbs., 25c.; 12 lbs., 49c."
> 9th.—Lewis' Lye; sign, "Lewi Lye, 10c. can."
> 10th.—White corn meal; sig "White corn meal, 3c. lb.; 7 lb 20c."
> 11th.—Mason's quart jars, fill with New Orleans molasses; sig reading, "Old-fashioned New O leans Molasses, gallon, 55c."
> 12th.—Babbitt's soap, no sign ov it.
> All signs pinned to backgroun which was about 27 inches high than the second row, exceptin where the pictures hang, and tha part was about 14 inches higher ye Above the price sign, yet below an between the pictures, was the mai sign, "Lest old acquaintances b forgot."
> On top of background I place equally apart packages of Washing ton Crisps, as per cut. In center placed a pair of vases, with sign a feet of same reading, "A pair o old-fashioned hand-painted vases o Revolutionary days, valued at $200." Between, yet back of vases, I place this large sign, "Washington Crisps a new article with an old-fashione name, 10c. package."
> In the corner at top I placed a quart Mason's jar filled with syrup (so placed that the light would strike it strong), taken down before photo was taken, yet you can still see a part of the sign, but not enough to read it; it was this "Genuine Old-fashioned Cane Syrup, 18c. qt."
> In the corner to the right I placed an old-fashioned celery holder, in which was placed a bunch of celery; sign reading, "Jerze Selery, 15c. bunch." At foot of dish I placed this sign, "Celery holder used before the Revolution; valued at $25."
> This window was in for two weeks and was the most profitable of any window which I ever dressed.
> Try your hand at making a window display of goods of this character, even though you can't get the "fixin's." The results will surprise you, I know.

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" requested some detailed information as to what sales could be actually traced to the display and Mr. Milby obligingly contributed the following:—

> The store represented is one of a series of chain stores, or, a so-called cut price or cash store; at any rate, we get cash for our goods.
> This store cannot be classed as a "big" store, yet it has about 25 per cent. more floor space than the average grocery and arranged into four departments, viz., groceries, meats, vegetables and cakes.
> The firm carries a daily advertisement in the newspapers and these ads. are for all the other stores, and yet there is not an article shown in the window which was ever mentioned in these ads. during their display of seventeen days. Furthermore, every article shown therein bore our regular prices, and I might say staple prices, because every grocer in the city sold the same goods at the same prices quoted here. Another thing, only on very rare occasions do I display an article in the store which I am showing in the window. I mention these things that you may be in a position to judge more accurately whether or not it paid from your (a grocer's) standpoint. I know it paid me, although I am not a grocer (only a clerk).
> I displayed twenty-seven items, each and every article met with a greater demand than I had looked

How Do You Let People Know They Can Buy Nationally Advertised Goods at Your Store?

This is the subject of the current monthly contest:—

5—How may a retailer most effectively advertise the fact that he is selling advertised goods?

What's the answer? It seems to be agreed that nationally advertised articles are good things to sell under normal conditions. That being so, they are good things for you to advertise, not so much to advertise the goods—their manufacturers are doing that—but to advertise the fact that you sell them. Will you give us your views on this and possibly win one of the following prizes:—

for. The sales on eelery and oranges could not be traced as sales made directly from the window. Babbitt's soap was another item not directly traced to its display, possibly because this is a town of three soaps, Ozone, Fells Naphtha and Procter & Gamble Naphtha. Another cause, perhaps, was it bore no price card. Washington Crisps, with us a poor seller, yet it had an 8 per cent. increase. We had a dozen or more calls for "lard in a bowl," and in this way we credited a sale of 32 pounds directly to the window, at 4½ cents a pound profit. This item alone paid for the wash, and some to spare, too.

Whole wheat flour (5-lb. bags) and ground salt (bushel bags) could be credited with but one bag each.

The sale of Exton crackers and Lewis' lye was increased at least 2 per cent.

Soda crackers, cooked mush (in 10c. pans), white corn meal and Arbuckle's coffee came in for an increase of 5 per cent. Mackerel (10-lb. kits) was not wanted, but it did help the sale of the No. 4s at 5 cents each.

New Orleans molasses, at 15 cents a quart, 55 cents a gallon, had a tremendous sale, nearly one and a half barrels being sold those two and a half weeks at 19 cents a gallon profit. I'll ask you, did it pay?

The syrup in bulk at 18 cents a quart, 60 cents a gallon, did not sell but three quarts for us. It was displayed in the upper left-hand corner, but jar removed for some cause before picture was taken.

Steel cut oat meal, Pearl hominy, brown sugar, whole boneless codfish and black eyed peas were the leaders next to molasses, their sales being increased fully 75 to 200 per cent.

Green coffee, never before shown, had a record of four pounds, and this made four customers (Italians, at that) who are still buying it of us.

Marrowfat beans enjoyed an increase of 10 per cent.

The black eyed peas caught the colored race for squares around, yellow meal (Indian) made friends with the pale faces at a great pace.

We made friends a new with the old-fashioned loose buckwheat at 12 lbs., 49 cents; 6 lbs., 25 cents, or 2 lbs., 9 cents.

Kerosene, or old-fashioned coal oil, at 11 cents a gallon, against some grocers' price of 10 cents a gallon, got us considerable trade for same, many persons thinking our store too large to sell oil.

Pure sweet cider at 25 cents a gallon, shown in the old-fashioned pitcher, did its share, too.

Another particular feature was it showed us the "non-thinker, or premium hunter class," many people were known to spend minutes looking at the window, only to come in the store and ask, "What does that pitcher go with?" or "What do you have to buy to get them vases?" Here was the grand chance for the genuine salesman and real grocer to get busy with his extra stamp goods, viz., tea, coffee, baking powder, spices and extracts.

Then, too, we were shown to a greater extent than we had thought possible the part the "man of the house takes in this food question." Many men came in the store, made their purchases from their memorandum, walked out satisfied, saw the window, stopped, looked and came in again, making a remark like this, "Give me two pounds of that hominy you have in the window; I haven't had any of that since I left the farm. I did not know you could buy it now. Let me have a 12-pound bag of that old-fashioned loose buckwheat in the window. My wife and I were only talking about it the other day and wondering why we could not buy it any more. Give me some of that real dark brown sugar you have in the window, will you. I asked my wife to make some ginger bread for me the other day and she said she could not get this sugar at Jones', so I will take it home to her and tell her she can get it here."

So you see 'tis not always the immediate sale which counts, but the come-back that puts pennies in the kid's bank.

While all items shown were especially noticeable by an increase averaging over 50 per cent. in sales, the most profitable feature was the fact that the public did not forget what had been displayed in the window, but came back weeks after and asked for some of the items.

Highest Court Says Retailers Can't Give Away Coloring Matter With Oleo. The Storm and the Markets. National Food Trades Conference. Brooklyn Food Show Hurt by Blizzard. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, March 5, 1914.

During the week there has been much talk about the probability of food being pushed up to famine prices because of the effects of the big storm in delaying shipments to the city and deliveries within the city. But nothing of the kind occurred. The regular corner grocers were equal to the emergency and had on hand sufficient supplies which they kept on selling without any material advances in prices—in fact, without any advance in any lines, except possibly in eggs and green fruits and vegetables, and in these there was very little change.

Some of the chain stores felt the effects of the traffic conditions more than the individual grocers. This was because some of these chain stores depend largely on daily deliveries from their central sources of supplies, and the condition of the roads and streets made such deliveries practically impossible for a day or two, at least in some parts of the city. In a number of these stores the supplies of various lines, such as butter and some kinds of canned food, were exhausted on the first day of the storm and their customers had to go without such supplies or go to other stores.

If the storm had continued two or three days longer, of course, conditions would have been much more serious. Without fresh arrivals from the West, the wholesale markets would have been quickly depleted. There was only one day, however, on which all shipments to New York were at a standstill.

Milk was the article most affected by the storm. The milk companies did not receive much supplies for a day or two, and besides found it impossible to make deliveries in many parts of the city. All of the milk that did come was frozen, and this has been the case with a large part of the city's milk supply in the last couple of weeks.

The National Food Trades Conference was formally organized at a meeting held Friday in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. The general object is to bring about harmonious and effective action on the part of Federal, State and municipal bodies and civic organizations interested in pure and honest food, to give support to the administration of food laws and especially to promote the movement for uniformity in such laws.

The By-Laws provide that the conference shall be made up of not more than five accredited delegates from each of the National food trades, civic and other organizations interested in the work. All National, State and municipal food control officials are invited to participate fully in the proceedings.

Meetings are to be held at least annually, at which the conference is to consider subjects relating to food laws so as to give aid in attaining purer and better foods honestly labeled and honestly advertised and sold.

It is believed that this conference will have a splendid educational effect in showing the public that the various branches of the food trades are not opposed, either openly or secretly, to the highest requirements governing the production and distribution of food, but on the contrary stand shoulder to shoulder in support of the laws and regulations which advance food standards.

President Louis Runkel, of the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association, presided at the sessions and Secretary John A. Green, of the National Retail Grocers' Association, acted as secretary.

In his opening address President Runkel explained that the American Specialty Manufacturers' Association had taken the preliminary steps for organizing the conference in the belief that sentiment for uniformity in food laws and control could be shaped by bringing together the various agencies that have been working with this end in view.

One of the important addresses was delivered by Dr. Sigmund Goldwater, who was recently appointed Health Commissioner of New York. He said that Mayor Mitchell and himself intend to have an advisory Food Commission appointed, which is to assist the Health Department in looking after food matters. It is intended to have the grocery trade represented on this commission.

The doctor said that when he took charge of the office last month he found the draft of a food code that had been prepared by the Department after long labors, during which all of the food laws in the world were carefully studied. would try to make the knowledge quired in compiling that code avai for legislatures and wherever it ma helpful.

Another idea was presented by Goldwater in relation to the wor the various food inspectors. He that in the past their efforts have directed altogether to detecting per who violate the food regulations. he regarded as simply repressive w He believed that much can be don the inspectors, in an educational wa encourage all dealers to maintain standards and not to violate any of regulations. One line of action, he will be to publish educational art in one or more of the city papers.

Other speakers included George Flanders, of the New York State partment of Agriculture; C. T. Te president of the Commissioners on U form State Laws; Miss Mary W chairman of the Legislative Commi of the New York State and City Fed tions of Women's Clubs; Fred. R. Dr Dr. Fritz Reichmann, Sealer of Weig and Measures in New York State; F. Sullivan, of the Illinois Food Sta ards Committee; Hugh F. Fox Alexander J. Porter.

WITH THE EDITOR

A Radical Short Weight Decision.

The Supreme Court of Indiana has just decided a short weight case which will interest every dealer who employs clerks. This case was brought against Hugh McCaffrey, a grocer of Peru, Ind., in which it was charged that the defendant, through his agent, sold a quantity of potatoes represented to be a peck, when in fact the potatoes weighed less than 15 pounds, which under the legal standard, is the weight of a peck of potatoes.

Mr. McCaffrey's lawyer wanted the case thrown out of court because McCaffrey was not connected with the offense and was not shown to have even had any knowledge of it. The lower court agreed with this and threw the case out, but the Supreme Court said this was wrong, because McCaffrey was responsible because he owned the store. The decision said: "The proprietor of a store must know that no false weights or measures are being used in his business, and in failing to do so must suffer the penalty." The Kansas courts have recently decided a similar case in the same way. It goes considerably further than cases of this sort have usually gone. Up to this time the courts have realized that the employer of several clerks could not possibly know what all of them were doing at every minute of the day, and if any of them committed a criminal offense on their own hook, the individual offenders, and not their employer, were responsible. This seems more sensible, but we admit that it opens the door to frauds that the Indiana decision would prevent. And perhaps the hardship that it will visit upon retailers is not so grievous as at first appears. Clerks do not give short weight or short measure to benefit themselves. There is nothing in it for them. They do it either because they are ignorant, or because they are supplied with incorrect weighing or measuring appliances by ignorant or careless employers, or because their employer is dishonest and compels them to give short weight or measure. Let an honest employer adequately instruct a clerk that he must invariably give full weight or measure, and let him supply him with proper appliances to do it with, and no employer will be required to answer for the crime of a clerk, for there will be no crime.

The Sixty-year-old Courage of T. B. Miller.

The writer has not been so powerfully appealed to in a long time as he was by a news article, published in a recent issue of the Wichita, Kan., "Price Current" about an old man named T. B. Miller, of Clay Center. T. B. Miller was a Kansas farmer until he was sixty years old. Then he decided to gratify a desire which had probably been in his mind all his life—to be a traveling salesman. Think of that, at sixty years. He sold his farm and went to Clay Center to hunt a job. First he showed himself a salesman by selling the services of a 60-year-old man, which, to our shame, has become a very difficult task. He engaged with the Hartman Broom Co. as traveling salesman, and to-day, after a lapse of only a few years, during which he has been traveling steadily toward 70, he is vice-president and general sales manager. The Hartman Co. employs thirty broom makers and is the la concern in Kansas.

Few indeed are the men wh enter a new line, wholly foreig them, and make a success o after they are sixty years old. average man over sixty years is a little difficult to keep tune to his old line, let alone going a new one. This is not a criti of 60-year-old men—of course cannot help the feelings which t age brings them, but when one across an exception who app to have all the ambitions youth, it is refreshing and app ing.

There are men who nurse ar tions to be something else their lives—men who bec grocers when they should h become doctors; men who come doctors when they sho have become farmers. The wo is full of miscast workers, v perhaps never wholly lose the sire and intent to get in the ri niche. But few have the cour to go at it and do it, howev after they have reached si years.

Clerks—Good and Bad

The conduct of its clerks can make or mar any retail business, large or small. If that conduct is bad, it can defeat the most complete and far-reaching plans which the employer has made for the operation of his store, and if it is good it can make a store succeed in spite of the more enormous deficiencies at other points.

Yet the education of his clerks, the coaching of them—teaching them to sell goods right, is the very last thing many a retailer thinks of. He will spend money on beautiful fixtures, beautiful window displays, expensive advertisements to attract people into his store, and when they are in, ready to spend their money, he will take it for granted that the clerks will get everything out of them that ought to be gotten. He assumes what many, many times—usually, in fact—is not true, viz., that every clerk he has is a born salesman and needs no developing of any kind.

Of course the average retail clerk is not a born salesman. If he were he would soon get to be something besides a retail clerk. A large number of retail clerks are not salesmen at all. They are not even courteous and well-meaning. Such clerks should never be hired at any price; they cost ten times as much as they come to.

But a large number of retail clerks could become good salesmen if they were coached and taught to be; that is the point to remember. Any clerk anxious to develop himself, put for one year under the tutelage of somebody who understands salesmanship, will be worth 50 per cent. more to his employer than he was before.

In Pittsburg, Pa., there is a department store which ranks well with any large store in the city. It is a typical department store—uses large advertisements in the daily papers, and employs all the other schemes to get people in.

Not long ago a friend of mine went in that store to buy a book. He got it, without much sympathy from the woman clerk, and when it was wrapped up, instead of handing it to him with a pleasant word, she slung it across the counter with "here's yer package."

My friend felt as if somebody had pinched him. Having definite ideas as to how clerks should act, he hunted up the department manager and related the circumstance, pointing out the clerk who had offended.

"Oh, yes, she's grouchy because she didn't get a raise," said the manager.

He did not appear to be especially impressed with the way she had satisfied her grouch, or with the bad taste that my friend w carrying out of the store.

Now I don't care what that st paid that clerk. I don't care they only paid her $2 a week; s was probably the costliest propo tion in the establishment.

In another dry goods store n far from Philadelphia the own peremptorily discharged a girl cle to whom he was paying $4 p week, because of a break she ma in selling muslin. She was put a counter piled with 12½ cent mu lin on one side, and 25 cent musl on the other. A customer aske her the difference between the tw and she said "no difference."

So out she went. Her employe when asked if he or anyone els had ever told her the differenc admitted that nobody had. Th clerk was not to blame, for sh probably used her $4 intelligenc the best she could.

A department store near Philaphia has a large grocery depart-ent that employs many clerks, ore on Saturday than at any other ne. One of the clerks, as a side e, covered University of Pennsylnia sports for a Philadelphia per. I know it to be a fact that certain times on Saturday afterons, the store's busiest time, this rk time and again slipped out of store, went over to the Uni-sity of Pennsylvania, gathered news and was back to his nter without any of his superi-knowing anything about it, ugh he was gone three hours!

Can a store so out of touch with clerks' movements expect to get ir best service?

A customer went into a Philadela department store a few days to buy a book of anecdotes—of those stock things that you uld almost expect a store boy to te instantly. Four clerks sucsively denied all knowledge of ere the book was, though they w they had it. Finally an apl to the aisle manager was made essary.

Did those clerks give that cuser an impression of quick, ingent service?

A retail grocery firm which operates two stores makes a clean 10 per cent. net on its sales every year. Last year its sales were $100,000, and its net profit $10,000. Many, many grocers are not doing so well. Why? Perhaps because this firm holds regular meetings for its clerks, topped by an annual banquet at which prizes are distributed for the greatest efficiency. Perhaps also because the employees of this house are paid higher wages than they can get for similar work anywhere else. It is a poor man who will not strain to hold a job like that!

In Baltimore a retail grocer with a fine store—everything the best—cannot understand why his net profits are only 2 per cent. of his sales. His yearly business is enormous, but his net profit a mere fraction of it. Of course I don't know why it is, but I can guess. He is getting about half the draught out of his clerks that he ought to get. Whose fault is that? E. J. B.

This "Short Course" for Merchants is First Organized Effort to Improve Retailers' Condition in this Country

One Week's Classes on Important Storekeeping Phases Held by University of Minnesota. Fee Only $3.00. List of Lectures and Subjects and How Days of the Little Term Were Filled.

So far as this journal knows, the first organized effort made in the United States to provide developing and improving courses for retail merchants has just been completed by the University of Minnesota, Minneapolis. It consists of what is called a "short course" for retail merchants, consisting of a series of lectures and lessons, continuing one week, on the important features of storekeeping, such as salesmanship, advertising, financing a business, store accounting and so on. The course has just been completed and was so successful that it will be continued from year to year. There were one hundred and thirty students. Merchants came from outside of Minnesota as well as from in that State, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota and Iowa. A canvass of the registration cards showed that about 90 per cent. of those present were owners of or partners in retail stores in the Northwest, the remainder being made up of employees of similar institutions or owners of neighborhood stores in the Twin Cities.

A feature of every lecture was the discussion that took place after the formal talk was completed. The speakers were asked to go further in explaining various points touched upon and a number of lively discussions between students and lecturers brought out experiences and information that were of the utmost benefit.

A "Question Box" was placed on the platform and a time was set apart for the consideration and discussion of such queries as might be of especial interest to the individual

The Most Important Factor in the American Egg Market is Chinese Eggs

They Are Already Coming Into the Country via the Pacific Coast. Can be Bought in China for Four Cents a Dozen and Landed in California at Six Cents. Not so Good as American Eggs, But Good Enough. Egg Men Are Beginning to Think Very Seriously of the Situation.

The egg trade all over the country is beginning to sit up and notice the eggs which have begun to come into California from China at prices far below the lowest price possible to the American producer. China is an enormous egg raiser, and eggs are abundant there at the seasons when they are scarce in this country. The ocean freight is cheap and the time of passage is not a serious obstacle.

People who are beginning to buy eggs in China for shipment to this country say they can buy them for 4 cents a dozen. The ocean freight rate without refrigeration is 22¼ cents per case; with refrigeration, double this, or 44½ cents per case. Fillers and cases will cost about 1 cent per dozen so that these eggs can be laid down here for less than 6 cents per dozen.

The importance which Chinese eggs have already attained to the markets of this country can be seen from the official figures showing importations from there to the United States during December, 1913, and the first half of January. In 1913 eggs to the value of $31,451 were shipped from Shanghai to the United States; of this total, shipments reaching $29,000 were made during the month of December, when 5,800 cases (of 30 dozen each) were forwarded. In the first half of the month of January, 1914, 1,044 cases, valued at $42,900, have gone forward, principally by the Northern steamship routes to Vancouver and Seattle, for American Pacific coast ports.

The egg prices fluctuate, of course, with the demand, and the recent heavy shipments to the United States have somewhat increased prices, which, for the larger sizes of eggs shipped, range from 12 to 15 Shanghai taels per 1,000 in Shanghai ($7.79 to $9.74 United States currency at the Government exchange rate for this quarter). To these prices, of course, must be added the cost of packing, shipping, freight, etc.

The writer has seen a copy of a letter written by a large egg operator on this subject, which is worth reproducing:—

> The writer thinks that these facts ought to convince the most skeptical that unless eggs are put away at prices far below the price of former years some one is going to get hurt, and it won't be the importer of Chinese eggs. He can quit buying while the fellow with a lot of high-priced eggs in storage must get rid of them.
> Supposing eggs are stored, say, at 20 cents, Chicago, or 22 cents out of the coolers, and Chinese eggs can be laid down in Chicago at even 12½ cents? It seems to me it does not require much strength of the imagination to tell what would happen to the egg market. The importers of Chinese eggs are not going to demoralize prices. They will sell theirs just enough below domestic to move them.
> California poultry men are scared. They have been holding meetings and resoluting like a Populist convention, but resolutions are not going to bar the Chinese eggs. They are appealing to the patriotism of the American people, asking the cooperation of the newspapers in giving the thing publicity and to help inaugurate a boycott on these Chinese eggs. It is certainly a poor time to make an appeal of this kind to the consumer. After passing through a winter of the highest prices ever experienced the consumers will hail with delight anything that means lower-priced eggs. The California poultrymen claim the Chinese hen is a scavenger. Undoubtedly. Did any one ever see a hen that wasn't?
> And now a word as to quality. The Chinese eggs are of a dark brown color, smaller in size than an Eastern. The first few shipments received were poorly graded and of inferior quality, but each succeeding shipment shows an improvement over the previous one. The last lot contained some very fine eggs, some weighing 53 to 54 pounds.
> They are going to teach the Chinese (and they are apt pupils) how to candle and grade, and it is only a question of time until Chinese eggs will compare favorably in point of quality with an Eastern egg.

At one time this season Chinese eggs sold on the coast at 21 cents a dozen, which was 17 cents a dozen less than the cost of California fancy ranch eggs.

There is nothing to prevent the eggs from being shipped all over the country. The holders could pay any freight rate and still undersell the market.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"That the name Armour is always a guaranty of quality."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants

Others who appeared in opposition to the bill were Thomas F. McCran, of the New York Canners' Association; Dr. Wm. P. Cutler, representing manufacturers of corn products; J. H. Beal, a food chemical expert from Ohio; N. J. Carlin, of the New York Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers.

The opposition did not agree at all with the claim that this bill would aid in bringing the State law into harmony with the Federal law. On the contrary, it was charged that it would widen the chasm and introduce additional confusion as to labeling and otherwise.

One of the charges against the bill was that it was inspired largely by a sensational newspaper writer who is prone to go to extremes and that this bill is aimed at a few supposed abuses without any effort to bring it into harmony with the Federal law. Several speakers said that they had no objection to some parts of the bill, especially sections in relation to sanitary provisions at the factories, but that the bill in other ways would work great injustice to many legitimate manufacturers.

Pure food is a popular slogan in these days. The food inspectors of the Board of Health had a pure food dinner the other night in a local café. It was stated that every article of food was officially inspected before it was prepared and served.

J. W. Sullivan, a member of the Typographical Union of this city, has written a letter to the Secretary of Labor taking issue with some of the statements issued by the Department of Labor in its recent bulletin as to the increased cost of living in the families of workingmen.

Mr. Sullivan denies that the cost of living has gone up in recent years to the extent claimed in the bulletin. He claims that the figures given in the bulletin were erroneous as to various items. Further, he claims that the writers of the bulletins were not well posted as to the classes of food used in the families of workingmen.

One of the points made by Mr. Sullivan is that workingmen have changed their diet to a considerable extent by substituting cereals and vegetables for flesh foods.

The Court of Appeals of this State has pased promptly on the case mentioned recently in these letters in which a question was raised as to the agricultural law being constitutional in its provisions which prohibit sellers of oleomargarine from giving away coloring material at the time that they sell the product.

The court upholds the law as constitutional and sustains the lower court in convicting the defendant in the case of violating the law. This was a test case brought against Peter H. Van Kampen, of Albany. The lower court imposed a fine of $100, which he will now be obliged to pay.

This seems to settle the matter as to giving away the coloring matter at the time that the oleomargarine is sold. The law prohibits the sale of colored oleomargarine in this State. It seems to be still legal for the consumer to buy the product and the coloring material separately and color the oleo for himself if he so desires. But the court held that for the dealer to give away the coloring material at the time of the sale was an invitation to break the law.

Large quantities of raw sugar have been withdrawn this week from the bonded warehouses by the refiners as the 25 per cent. reduction in duties on Cuban sugars has become effective. The first day after the reduction was effective the refiners paid close to a half million dollars in duties on the sugars withdrawn.

The refiners have increased their meltings and look for a broadened consumption. They seem to believe that the price will not go below the present basis of 4 cents for standard granulated, although distributors are inclined to think that there will be a further reduction. According to the refiners, the effects of the reduction in duties were discounted when the present low basis was reached.

The constitutionality of the law prohibiting a grocer from giving coloring matter to a purchaser of oleomargarine was upheld last Monday by the Court of Appeals. The question of the constitutionality was raised by Peter H. Van Kempen, a Brooklyn grocer, who was fined $100 for violation of the provision. The Court of Appeals declared the fine legally imposed.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Spot coffee is dull and prices are nominal. Roasters are buying only for their actual requirements. The storm caused some little accumulation of business in the last day or two, but the extra orders seem to be simply to make up for the storm's delays. Rios 7s are nominally 9⅛ cents and Santos 4s are about 11¾ to 12 cents. There is a small inquiry of jobbing kind for the mild grades, but very little activity at first hands. The spot supply of washed coffees seems moderate, with prices steady.

There is a light jobbing business in teas. Traffic conditions have interfered with deliveries of teas as well as of other food supplies of all kinds. Prices of teas, both blacks and greens, are steady. Warehouse stocks are moderate. Importers are inviting orders for new crop Japans and report a fair interest.

Improvement is reported in the demand for refined sugar, although the aggregate business is said to be below the expectations of the refiners. Most of the distributors believe that there will be a decline from the 4-cent basis for standard granulated, and so are inclined to await developments and buy only for current needs. It is said, however, that stocks in the hands of the distributors are light and that the consuming demand will soon force a more active movement. Meltings at the refineries are larger and the refiners are catching up with deliveries. The Federal is said to be the only refinery making really prompt shipments, but the others will be able to do so soon.

In some quarters there is an proved demand for rice. There been difficulty in making deliveries, distributors who have been going a in a hand-to-mouth way are now a more urgent in demanding supplies

There is a moderate demand from grinders for spices, the demand co ing the general list. Brokers report the market prices in some instances below the cost to import. Shipment the last month have been moderate.

Spot trade in canned vegetable quiet at first hands. The jobbers h been busy taking care of their reg business and making deliveries under difficulties brought about by the sto as trucking of all kinds is slow, streets being still clogged with ice snow. The work is taking up all of time of the wholesalers and they placing little new business with the p ducers or brokers. More activity is pected as soon as traffic conditions the streets become normal, since sto of distributors are believed to be g ting down to low ebb, while the spr demand is about to open. There is, a consequence, a firm feeling in all the staple lines. There is as yet li demand for futures. Future corn getting a little more attention than ot lines, according to the reports. Most the local jobbers have not yet comple their purchases of the new crop Maine corn and are apparently wait for price concessions. The packers cline to grant any concessions, ho ever, and point to the cost of prod tion and the uncertainty as to the ac age. Spot tomatoes are firm on basis of 70 cents for No. 3s and cents for No. 2s at the factory, f. o.

Trade in canned fruit is quiet, l the market is strong in tone as offeri in nearly all lines are light.

Spot stocks of Maine sardines about exhausted as far as first han are concerned and jobbers have no m than sufficient for requirements. So of the brokers are offering 1914 pack $2.75 for quarter oils in keyless ca but distributors are not responding any considerable extent. Salmon quiet, but firm. There is little activ in other kinds of canned fish, but w available supplies generally light, t market is firm.

In dried fruits there is an increasi demand and a firm feeling in the va ious lines. The consuming demand making itself felt more strongly n than for some time past and the tra expects it to increase further. The u ward movement in prunes has co tinued. Coast supplies are said to small for this part of the season a spot supplies are well controlled. T wholesale grocers think that the fir of the advance has been rushed, as a further increase in prices would che consumption. California prunes on t spot are selling on the basis of abo 10 cents for 40s. There is a stron tone to dried apricots because of t light offerings, although buying is lir ited to the actual needs of consumptio Raisins are moving slowly into co sumption and orders are mostly f small lots. In announcing this change we take the opportunity of thanking you for the support extended to us in the past, and trust that the business advantages gained by the economies effected by the amalgamation, and the extended organisation both in America and the East, will merit the continuance of the same to the new Company.

ties. Currants are quiet. Figs are firm and rather active. Spot layer figs are quite closely cleaned up and have an advancing tendency.

The easier wheat market has made buyers even more reluctant than before to meet the views of millers and brokers as to flour values. As a result, there is little business in flour, as the mills generally refuse to make any concessions. The smaller dealers are buying more frequently than the larger dealers and there is considerable shopping around in efforts to get lower prices. It is possible that some of the mills are quietly offering slight inducements to especially desirable customers.

Butter is in increased supply and the tone of the market is not as strong as it was a week ago. Jobbers are buying only for current needs and receivers seem desirous of cleaning up arrivals as promptly as possible. Most of the sales of fresh creamery extras are at 31½ to 32 cents. The firsts have a range of 28 to 31 cents and seconds from 24 to 27 cents. The lower grades of fresh creamery are especially plentiful. The held butter sells for about 2 cents less than corresponding grades of fresh creamery. Process is quiet and steady, with the best grades ranging from 21 to 23 cents.

The traffic conditions have delayed deliveries of eggs, as a result of which there is a temporary shortage of the best qualities and prices are a little higher. The market in general is unsettled with the trade waiting on the arrivals of delayed supplies and the expected break in prices. The best grades of fresh-gathered Western and Southern eggs are selling to-day within a range of 32 to 34 cents. The nearby white eggs have a range up to 35 cents, but are expected to go lower as soon as heavier supplies arrive, and they are expected within a few days. European eggs have a range from 21 to 28 cents. Duck eggs are scarce and sell within a range of 33 to 42 cents, the higher prices being for State and Baltimore eggs and the lower prices for those from the far South.

Hardware

Useful in Economical Shelf Arrangements.

In fitting up his store the selection and economical arranging of shelving is frequently a problem with the merchant, who desires to make the most of the wall space at his disposal. One article in mind to aid in the solving of the puzzle is the choice of shelf brackets. Adjustable shelf brackets that are not out on the front edge of the shelving or in between edges, are to be recommended. By adopting this kind there are no obstructions to interfere with the display of merchandise or the use of every inch of shelf room. When the brackets are in place shelving can be easily adjusted and readjusted to meet conditions varying with different kinds of stock.

Big Season for Philadelphia House.

Lewis W. Klahr, of the Seltzer-Klahr Hardware Co., the jobbers, is also treasurer of the Enterprise Mfg. Co., which is recording the greatest selling season in its long and eventful history.

An Interesting Selling Problem.

A Western manufacturer of a specialty in the hardware line and used largely by agriculturists, is in a quandary how to push its sale in sparsely settled communities—rather where stores are none too plentiful. The firm's travelers go direct to the retailer, demonstrate the goods and then rely on him to create and sell the article to the farmer or mechanic. There is no doubt of the superior merit and utility of the goods in point; and this is only one of many instances where sales are expected to be exploited by the dealer handling hardware, either exclusively or as a prominent stock, in connection with other merchandise typical of a general store. The plan followed is to get the initial order from the consumer, who is sold at first hand, and then the dealer is made interested and reorders go through the jobber. There are other and more permanent methods that may be adopted which would be less costly, not to say more effective and resulting in quicker action, by any manufacturer desiring to sell his product through regular trade channels. But that is another story, and it makes immediate markets for goods, according to an expert.

Cutlery and the Tariff.

How much will cutlery be affected by the tariff is a question retail buyers of hardware have asked of the jobbers and manufacturers since the enactment of the new law? On this line the duties, ranging from 5 to 10 per cent., are reduced more than in any other hardware item. It is evident there will be no immediate radical changes, though the foreign price-lists have not yet appeared, as is instanced in the statement of a prominent jobber in last week's issue of this journal. What revision will take place is likely to be on medium price penknives, as the rate on higher grades is about the same as in the old act. The tendency so far revealed is to improve the quality to offset the difference in duty.

As a rule German manufacturers, who are prone to flood every market they enter with cheaply made products, have not found the American trade very keen for poorly finished cutlery. They are expected to finish their knives better and allow them to sell at the same price as under the former tariff. In pearl handled knives the price will be approximately the same, and the cheaper grades will disappear. The jack-knife trade will not be disturbed by foreign competition, as this class of cutlery is all machine made and therefore occupies a field of its own which the European manufacturer has been unable to successfully enter.

Word comes from the "inner circle"—whatever that may mean—that better finished cutlery is compulsory under the new tariff provisions. One improvement is that all pocket knives will be brass-lined. In other words the iron-lined knife is a back number, and jobbers now revising their lines and catalogues are discarding the old style lining. The jack-knife will probably come off fifty cents cheaper on the dozen to the merchant, and in some cases would permit of a lower retail price; but it is not believed there will be any reduction, as the difference is too slight.

Cheap razors will be qu

This Must Have Been Some Meeting.

Washington, D. C.,
February 26, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—At the meeting of the Washington Grocers' Association we had with us your representative of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," and am glad to say that every one of us was pleased to meet him and have him with us.

He gave us a little speech, telling us how nice the good old Philadelphia grocers are getting along amongst all their 7,441 chain stores, also asked us to treat the traveling salesman extra nice, to always give him the glad hand, as some of these nice days we might become one of them ourselves, providing we save money enough beforehand to make the first installment payment on a new suit of clothes, including a red necktie and a pair of fancy socks. He then distributed some of the latest copies of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," explaining all its good points, besides telling us the price was $3 per year, which we could save a thousand times by going out of the business.

After the meeting we invited him to join us at our yearly luncheon, which we were giving that eve. He accepted on the spot, showing his good sense, and believe me, this is where he got even with us for the free copies he had given us.

A few more jokes were told and everybody went home (at least they said they got home) just and happy, excepting a few who could not eat their ice cream on account of getting on the outside of too many blue points.

But by the way, all this may not interest you at all. My main object for spending 2 cents for a stamp, which is the profit on six loaves of bread, the 3 for 10-cent kind, a very popular seller in some parts of this town (got the profit on your Nationally advertised goods skinned a mile) is to get you to send me the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" again.

Some of our members spoke very highly of your paper at our meeting. I forget how many thousands one of them saved by just watching your look out on butter. Inclosed find check for $3.

Yours truly,
W. T. WALTHER.

Wanted, a Second-hand Cash Register.

Pine Grove Furnace, Pa.,
March 3, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I want to take advantage of your new service department, which I think is a splendid thing. Just now I am in need of a second-hand cash register. I will open a new store at the above address some time this month. A cash register running from 1 cent to $3 would be all right. There are other things I will need later, but need this very soon if I can get one.

Very truly yours,
CHAS. H. COBEAN.

The National Cash Register Co.'s Philadelphia branch, Eighth and Chestnut streets, has a second-hand total adder, registering from 1 cent to $3.99, with paper tape printer, which can probably be bought for $60; new it would be worth $80 to $90.

The American Cash Register Co., 920 Spring Garden street, has a similar register, except that it registers up to $9.99. Has a tape printer and is guaranteed for two years. Price $50; was $100 when new.

H. F. Heacock, 51 North Second street, Philadelphia, has a second-hand Hallwood—the first two are Nationals—for $40. Registers from 1 cent to $9.99.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—Would you please give us your opinion on this ad. and suggest a few ways for us to get more business, and oblige,

Yours truly,
McGONIGLE & LONG.

The advertisement enclosed was a 4-page little sheet 9 x 12 inches, called "The News Letter." It appears to be issued periodically. The first and fourth pages are filled with boiler plate, ready-made reading matter, any old thing being selected, apparently just so it will fill up. These pages might just as well be left blank, for all the good they do now. I can't imagine anybody reading this matter on its merits. As a matter of fact, they could hardly read it even if they had tried to, for it is very badly printed. In fact it is pretty nearly the worst printed piece of advertising I remember coming into this department. If I were a retailer I should not let such a thing go out to represent my store for any money. Apparently the printer (?) has used no care whatever to make this job look well. Half of it is gummed up with an excess of ink, the rules show where they should not and fail to show where they should, and this applies to both the first and the fourth pages. It ought to be made a crime to get out such printed matter; not a crime on McGonigle & Long's part—they are the victims—but a crime on the part of the printer (?) whose work it is.

The inside is printed as a circular and the work is far better. How logical to put the bad work on the outside and the good work on the inside! Here is the reduced reproduction in the previous column.

* * *

I have no complaint with the quality of the printing here, except that there are a few typographical errors. I wonder if the outside was done by another printer. As for the advertising quality, this is very fair, though it is too much like a price-list to suit me. I think you have tried to cover too much ground—advertised too many articles at one time. I can easily believe that this entire circular might be devoted to the advertising of a single article in such a way as to get more business in the aggregate than the business which this circular got for all these thirty or forty articles. When you are making up a circular like this, it is usually a good plan to choose only those articles about which something special can be said, such as chipped beef and pitted prunes, omitting those articles which you would feel like simply quoting and nothing more.

If I were McGonigle & Long, I should not print any more plate matter in my advertisements. It deceives nobody, it attracts nobody. I should make my circular half the size and print it on both sides. I felt I wanted to do that much advertising at a time. Or I would have printed it as he has done, leaving blank the side now filled with plate matter.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the development of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications intended for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken in strict rotation.

weather talk ain't carried far h though, if you ask me. It horough, as you might say. feel you've done your stunt you say "nice day," and Mrs. thinks she's done hers when ys "yes it is." It ought to go further. There's more meat in the thing than that.

"Morning, Mrs. Smith. Nice day."

"Yes, it is."

"I'll tell you why I think so, Mrs. Smith. I think so because over in China it ain't raining like it is here, and the snow that'll be coming on before night will be as pure as our justly celebrated jellies and jams. That's why I think it's a nice day, Mrs. Smith."

And Mrs. Smith'll be so plumb interested she'll probably ask you to say it all over again. That's the first time she's heard anything like that. You'll say it all over again and so on. She'll go home and tell the ladies at the sewing circle about you and they'll all be sorry they didn't marry a fellow with a brain like yours. What's more, they'll all come down to buy goods of you.

There ain't any end to what you can do if you dope it out right.

You can do better in another way, too. Maybe Mrs. Smith blows first in the weather talk.

"Morning, Mr. Jackson. Nice day."

That's where you usually come in with "yes it is," or "indeed it is, Mrs. Smith, a very fine day!" Depending on whether Mrs. Smith spends a dollar a week for drives, or $20 a week for 45-cent Mocha and Java. There ain't any originality about that. Do something to make her remmber you. Instead of doping out that kind of dope that everybody dopes out, get back at her with something clever. Say like this:—

"No, it ain't a nice day, you old fat tumor, and you know it ain't!"

Then laugh to kill yourself and let her know it's all a joke. You can bet she'll remember that all right, and she'll remember you too. And when her husband comes down that night to thank you for giving his wife such a good time, you can get your work in again. Why I believe if I could only open a store and put some of these great ideas over I'd be the most talked of dealer in the town. It wouldn't take me long either. I'll bet the people would think so much of what I did that they'd send a committee to see me. THE STROLLER.

Written for the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

This Correspondent Demands That Retailers Use Clean and Full-weight Butter Dishes and Food Trays

Says Many Retailers Weigh in Such Dishes With the Product Sold in Them. Says Consumers Yearly Lose $5,000,000 By It.

I have to-day filed with the various food officials of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York and other States, together with the food officials of the Federal Government, the petition which appears below. It is a part of a campaign which is being conducted for the purpose of urging the enforcement of laws which will affect all manufacturers of all brands and kinds of so-called butter dishes, and is not being conducted for the purpose of advertising (favorably or unfavorably), through the press or public officials, the product or name of any manufacturer. The petition is as follows:—

Dear Sir:—There have been approximately 50,000,000 pounds of so-called butter dishes, lard trays or food trays made of wood, paper or wood pulp, used annually in the United States by the retail grocers and retail butchers, upon which to deliver to the consumer butter, lard, meats and many other food products.

There appear to be specific laws in most States making it unlawful for any person, corporation or packer selling package goods to charge for more than the actual net weight contained in the package, and requiring the person, corporation or packer to print on the package the net weight of its contents.

In some States there is a noticeable absence of any specific law or regulation of weights and measures men, making it unlawful for the retail merchant to include the weight of a so-called food tray or carrier when weighing food not sold in original packages, but taken from large tubs or bulk packages. This surprising condition exists in face of the fact that there have been approximately 50,000,000 pounds of food trays, or so-called butter dishes used in the United States per annum.

Where the weight of these dishes is being included (which is a prevailing custom in many communities) as part of the weight of the food products which they contain, the practice is defrauding the consumer.

These dishes used in an insanitary manner (which is the prevailing custom in many communities) are possible spreaders of disease to a much greater extent, it would seem to me, than disease has ever been spread by the house fly.

One of the prominent trade list companies publishes the names of 172,847 retail grocers and of 51,640 retail butcher and meat markets in the United States.

A dishonest practice or custom of long duration is sometimes followed by honest men until, through the arousing of public sentiment, such practices are recognized by them as being dishonorable. This, I believe, applies as much to the man who conducts the corner grocery store or butcher shop as it does to the manager of the large corporation.

The approximate quantity of so-called butter dishes or lard trays which have been used per annum in the United States is 1,000,000,000.

Approximately 65 per cent. of the butter dishes or lard trays used are made of wood.

The approximate average net weight of the 1,000,000,000 dishes or trays used is 50 pounds per 1,000.

The approximate total net weight of 1,000,000,000 dishes at 50 pounds per 1,000 is 50,000,000 pounds.

The approximate average cost to the grocer and butcher of dishes or trays is 3 cents per pound.

One billion dishes or trays (50,000,000 pounds) at 3 cents per pound is equal to $1,500,000.

One billion dishes or trays (50,000,000 pounds) if weighed with butter, lard, meats or small vegetables and sold to the consumer by the pound at an average price for these food products of only 13 cents per pound is equal to $6,500,000.

The difference between the price of 1,000,000,000 dishes or trays (50,000,000 pounds) at 3 cents per pound and 1,000,000,000 dishes (50,000,000 pounds) at 13 cents per pound is equal to $5,000,000.

For the population of the United States a loss of $5,000,000 would be equal to a per capita tax of only about 5 cents per year, which is entirely too small a matter to justify the attention of any individual, but is it not a matter entitled to the attention of the public officials in charge of weights and measures?

Where in any community retail grocers and butchers demand an extra heavy weight butter dish (regardless of quality, merits or price to be charged to the consumer at the price per pound of butter or other foods, it is an indication of an existing dishonest practice overlooked by weights and measures officials of that community.

Where in any community retail grocers and butchers demand a butter dish to be used in an insanitary manner, without a sheet of some clean and pure material being placed between the dish and the food, it is an indication of an existing insanitary practice overlooked by the pure food officials of that community.

The facts as stated are submitted for the purpose of causing to be established certain standards of sanitation and honesty of weights with which standards all manufacturers and distributors of food trays, and all grocers and butchers using food trays shall be required to comply. JOHN M. HART

Pittsburg, Pa., March 5, 1914

An educational campaign among the 50,000 organized laboring men in Pittsburg is being conducted by the leaders in the movement to establish a string of co-operative stores. About 400 men attended the meeting in Labor Temple Sunday, February 22d, at which plans for the campaign were explained and district captains appointed to direct the work. Joseph H. Kane, president of the Federated Co-operative Association, explained the co-operative system in vogue in Wales and England among the workingmen. In every community in the Pittsburg industrial district, where there is a population of 250 or more, a store will be established if this is asked for by petition from the people. The stores will handle everything sold in grocery stores.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

VIII.—Buying Coffees so as to Assure Uniformity of Blends and Goods Offered Consumers.

By William B. Harris.

The retail dealer often wonders whether he is buying his coffees to the best advantage, and whether his source of supply is the one to which he should look for the best cup results. Brokers and salesmen drop in occasionally, and where they are not getting any portion of the business they frequently make every effort to unsettle the dealer as regarding his coffees, thinking that in this way they will be able to get a hold of his coffee business.

There are of course several sources from which the grocer might be expected to obtain green coffees. In the first place there is the importer, the green coffee jobber, the coffee roaster and the wholesale grocer. It is a rather difficult matter to state just what limit to place on the term importer, if such a term is applied to any particular branch of the trade. There are concerns that bring in large quantities of coffee, but they in turn are jobbers, selling green coffees to other jobbers and wholesale houses.

On the other hand the coffee roaster imports a portion of his merchandise and many wholesale grocers are likewise importers. With the larger importers it will be impossible for the retail dealer to consider dealing, as they would not ship orders made up of two or three bags of a number of grades. This leaves the green coffee jobber, the coffee roaster who is also a jobber, and the wholesale grocer to be considered.

The green coffee jobber will deliver the grade called for according to exchange standards. In the majority of cases he would not attempt to make selections, the extent of his guarantee being that the coffees would be smooth, and if a Santos, lacking any Rio character.

It is important for the grocer to have not only grade, but also coffees of satisfactory character and smooth cup. The various coffees that he will use in making up his blends should be carefully selected and thoroughly tested as regards cup quality. Then subsequent shipments should follow with the same character in the cup. It will not do to ship a full bodied Bogota on one order and follow this with a coffee of acid character, as this would throw his blends out. He must be certain that the cup quality of the shipments will remain uniform.

The concerns that are best qualified to make selections in this regard are those that are putting out roasted coffees in blends. Such concerns spend hours in cupping coffees from all the grades that the market affords and can therefore keep their various lines uniform, so that under ordinary conditions their shipments will show very little variation.

Besides this, if the machine should get out of order so that for any reason the dealer found it impossible to roast his own coffees his grades could be forwarded just the same as the house supplying him would know exactly what was wanted, and would be in position to roast the green coffees for him.

The wholesale grocer is of course a factor in supplying both green and roasted coffees to the retail trade. In many cases the green coffee department of the wholesale grocer is larger and better equipped than many concerns that do only a coffee business. Where the wholesale grocer has a department of this description the concern could of course supply the retail dealer with green coffees as satisfactorily as the coffee roaster. The fact is that such houses are on practically the same basis as the coffee roaster and are always competing for the roast coffee business.

There is, however, a strong prejudice on the part of these dealers in regard to this line of business. They are for the most part opposed to selling the retail dealer anything other than roasted coffees, or to giving the retail dealer any information that would enable him to purchase his green coffee supplies intelligently.

The question as to the source of supplies, however, is one that the grocer must determine himself, for as previously pointed out, he must at the start select some concern from whom he will be reasonably sure to receive the coffees he orders and uniform shipments. He is more likely to build up a satisfactory business, however, with the supplies received from the coffee roaster and jobber than from the wholesale grocer.

The retail grocer in the past has depended very largely upon the salesman in connection with his roasted coffees. He has in fact left the selection of his coffees too much to the judgment or desire of the salesman regularly calling upon him. If he had known a little more about his coffee business, and what he was getting, it is highly probable that this department would be of very much more importance than is often the case. The salesman in many instances has had far too much latitude in the shipment of both teas and coffees to the retail dealer.

As far as a difference in price is concerned, there might occasionally be a slight saving where orders were placed direct, but this is not by any means always the case. Very frequently the dealer buys just as cheaply of the salesman as by sending an order direct to the house. Most of the roast coffee dealers have fixed selling prices for their various brands and blends. It would hardly be policy to make a quotation to one dealer in a city who 'phoned in his orders, and another quotation to another dealer on the same block who bought his supplies of the salesman. For this reason in the majority of cases the same price would be quoted in both directions.

When it comes to the question of selling green coffees the percentage of profit is very much smaller, and in many cases such coffees are sold on a brokerage basis, which would not in any wise affect the price that the retail dealer paid. For the reason that there is such a small percentage of profit in green coffees, salesmen outside of the large citi pay very little attention to th branch of the business, and most it is done direct.

Important Tea Trade Amalgamation.

A. P. Irwin & Co., Philadelphia a New York, Combine With Harriso & Crosfield, of London. Latter Co cern One of the Largest in the Wor New Corporation Formed.

Among the interesting trade d velopments of the week is the a nouncement of the amalgamation the business of Harrisons & Cro field, London, in the United Stat and that of A. P. Irwin & Co., th well-known American house, wit headquarters in Philadelphia an New York. The London corpora tion has a capital of $4,000,000 an does a business exceeding 70 000,000 pounds of tea per annun extending all over the world, in cluding South Africa, Australia New Zealand, Russia, Persia, Ger many, France, the British Isles an Canada.

Realizing the growing deman for India, Ceylon and Java tea i the United States, also that it had world wide sale and that this enor mous business could be done to th best advantage only by a corpora tion having a buying and selling force all over the world, Messrs. A P. Irwin & Co. decided that the could best serve the interests of th American trade by an amalgama tion with the largest importer i the world, instead of opening thei own houses in Colombia, Calcutta Batavia and London, thus increas ing the buying competition in thos markets with no possible advantag to the trade in America.

It must also be remembered tha the American market for tea i comparatively small, especially i this marked when we realize tha the consumption of tea in New Zealand per capita is 9 pounds; i Australia, 8 pounds; in England, pounds; in Canada and Britis Isles, 7 pounds, and in America, pound.

A new corporation has bee formed, Irwin, Harrison & Cros field, Inc., with A. P. Irwin presi dent, R. F. Irwin treasurer and R L. Hecht secretary. The new cor poration starts out under the mos auspicious conditions and with the best wishes of the entire tea trade of the United States with which they have been so closely identified for many years.

19—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because every manufacturer of unadvertised goods uses nationally advertised brands as standards of quality, and it is better merchandising to sell the standards than to sell the brands patterned after them.

¶ This is so without one exception. How many unadvertised goods have been offered to you, with the argument that "they are as good" as Baker's Cocoa, or Welch's Grape Juice, or a dozen other well known things? The manufacturers of the obscure goods all seem to feel that when they represent their goods to be "as good as" something else, they are saying the most that can be said.

¶ Suppose their goods are as good as the nationally advertised brands—what about the steady, constant demand that has been created for nationally advertised goods, but which the obscure brands never have?

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. Prices are steady to firm and the demand is fair. The market is in a very healthy condition owing to the lack of any heavy surplus. The season is getting late and while there may be some slight further advance in certain lines as the scarcity becomes more pronounced, it will have to come pretty soon or it will not come at all.

Coffee.

The coffee market is very heavy. The demand for Rio and Santos coffee has been very dull during the week, trade being for actual wants only, which appear to be light. Prices show no quotable change, but the tendency is easy. Mild grades are steady to firm but without any development for the week. There is a regular demand but at the moment it is not large. Java and Mocha are both unchanged and firm.

Sugar.

Since the last report all refiners have reduced their prices for granulated to 4 cents a pound in a large way and it isn't unlikely that within a short time further declines may occur, as the tariff on raw sugar is reduced. Nobody is buying largely because they are afraid of the market and the situation at present is very dull and rather weak. The consumptive demand for refined sugar is seasonable.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose has declined 5 points since the last report and the bulk syrup declined slightly with it, but tinned compound goods remain the same. Sugar syrup is unchanged and in quiet demand. Molasses wanted moderately without change in price.

Fish.

The market for Norway is steadily tending upward and the advance for the last month probably aggregates $1 a barrel. Nothing is offered in Norway at all, stocks being completely cleaned up there. Several American holders have stock which they are holding for higher prices and if the Lenten demand amounts to anything they will probably ask more money, although Norway mackerel have already reached pretty nearly the limit of price. Norway 4s can hardly now be sold retail for 5 cents and the holders can scarcely advance very much more without having their demand seriously curtailed. There are no fine Irish mackerel. The entire stock of Irish mackerel is dark winter caught fish which are not wanted and are selling at nominal prices. Cod, hake and haddock are temporarily very scarce on spot in secondary markets, due to the bad weather, but prices have not materially advanced. The markets in all are firm. Salmon of all grades is unchanged with the exception of the fact that Horseshoe salmon has advanced 5 cents per dozen during the week. The demand for salmon is good. Domestic sardines are scarce and higher, but without change for the week. Imported sardines also scarce and very high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes show no change for the week. The market is steady with a fair demand. No indications of any immediate sharp advance, although prices may be higher later in the season. Corn and peas, both spot and future, are unchanged and dull, although there is something doing every day. Apples are tending higher on account of scarcity and some holders of New York State gallons are now asking $3.25 in a large way. California canned goods are moving in a very small way in first hands at unchanged prices. Small Eastern staple canned goods unchanged and in fair demand. All lines are getting broken and there is a scarcity in many lines of canned goods.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans are unchanged from a week ago and in fair demand. Marrows are also unchanged and are moderately wanted. California limas show another advance of 10 points, making 30 points within a few weeks. Scarcity is the cause. Green and Scotch peas are dull and unchanged, the market being weak.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change for the week, but there is a chorus of predictions of advance from the coast. There seems to be a well established scarcity and all the authorities seem to agree that if there is any demand there will be advances. Peaches are still quiet, but better demand is expected for them, and if that time comes prices will probably be higher. Apricots very high and unchanged in price; demand light. Raisins show no change and fair demand. Currants and other dried fruits dull and unchanged.

Butter.

The butter market is firm at 1 cent advance over last week. The weather is interfering with the ordinary course of the market. Receipts are very light and the situation firm. All fresh butter is cleaned up on arrival each day, but there seems to be still considerable in storage which is not wanted and will be sold at about 5 cents per pound below the price of fresh butter. The receipts now, however, are beginning to come forward more regularly and when they resume and increase prices will probably be lower.

Eggs.

The egg market has advanced 3 to 4 cents during the week, due to a shortage in receipts caused by the weather. Enough goods are coming forward to supply the demand, as everything is cleaned up on arrival. The roads are being reopened and more goods should come forward from now on. As soon as the receipts increase prices will take a decline.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand for cheese has increased during the week and the situation is firm and unchanged. Stocks are still reported light everywhere, and the market promises to continue firm about on the present basis.

Provisions.

All cuts of smoked meats, bellies, bacon, picnic, regular and skinback hams are steady at an advance of ¼ cent, due to increased consumptive demand. Pure and compound lard are steady at unchanged prices with only a moderate consumptive demand. Dried beef, barreled pork and canned meats are unchanged and dull.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPOR

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

There has been no change in evaporated apple situation throu out the past week. The dem from the domestic market contin fair, as well as from Europe, while the volume of business is large, prices are well sustaine

Cold storage prime, in 50-po boxes, is quotable at 8¼ to cents; 1913 crop prime, 8½ to cents; choice, either old or new held at 9¼ to 9½ cents, s transactions having been made the former price for full carl lots. Strictly fancy is held at u 13 cents, with offerings limited, not many orders.

Raspberries are somewhat eas sellers showing a willingness to prices on fair sized orders. market is quotable at 22½ to cents f. o. b. in barrels.

Standard Canned Goods.

Developments last week in tomato market here were unimp tant, and there was a dearth news concerning the canned art Usually at this time in the sea the chief topic of discussion is attitude of the growers toward canners as to the contract price the coming crop for canning p poses, but the subject has not been mentioned by either side, most likely there will be nothing a definite character done along t line before April or May. price at which the canners are ling to contract for the new crop tomatoes largely governs the d sion of the growers as to the of the acreage to be devoted them, though in the last few ye the growers have gone ahead w out regard to the probable requ ments of the canners. The ind tions at this time, however, are the direction of a smaller acre this year.

Very cold weather, with a b zard or two, has been our port during the last two weeks, and weather bureau predicts more o in the near future. Notwithsta ing the fact that the goods are to freeze on the road, the dem last week for spot tomatoes prompt shipment was satisfact to the canners, and it kept the m ket prices on a level with the q tations of the week previous. T same sections that bought them l month continue to buy tomatoes to this date, and every order ca for immediate shipment, which quite significant. For future del ery there is very little doing as the tomato market here. The ners show no disposition to ac- t business at any lower prices n to-day's quotations and the bers are not in any hurry to buy m.

String beans were stronger again week, and the prices advanced small buying. Cut beans and ngless beans are sold out. Sweet atoes was the next active article orders ranging from one car- l down, and they show signs of proving in prices. Kraut, baked ns and spinach were active in e lots and were wanted for ck shipment. There is a great l of street gossip about some- ng going to happen in the corn ket and a higher level of prices predicted, but it is not yet in nt. When the weather moder- each of these items will sell e freely and the prices may ad- ce. Peas are at a standstill with immediate prospects of doing better.

Again apples were active and the ilable supplies are prety well ex- sted, especially the No. 10 size. stocks of pears here are very t, too. Some pineapples and a peaches moved out during the k, but the other fruits were dull and inactive. Were it for the very small stocks of n the prices would decline.

Bitterly cold weather and snow g the Chesapeake Bay has sed a very small supply of raw ers. The market prices for oysters have stiffened up and be still stronger if the freezing ther prevails this week.

Rice.

Notwithstanding the recent decline in prices of Japan rice and the consequent slow movement in that style for the moment, there is still but little abatement in the cheerful spirit which followed the annual inventories, and it seems clear that the country, as far as business progress is concerned, has definitely turned the corner. This condition is not yet markedly apparent in the situation as a whole, but the trade are certainly taking a broader and much more comprehensive view of the business outlook, and there is more disposition as the spring approaches to increase holdings against an undoubted improvement in demand for all styles, both Honduras and Japan, as well as foreign.

The better qualities of Honduras have the call at top-notch prices on account of the increasing scarcity of the high grades. There is also an improving demand for the prime intermediate grades at full figures. Japan, however, has the largest movement because of the unusually low quotations. Japan has not been so low for several years and is the best proposition in rice to-day.

The imports of foreign still continue heavy, but are receiving more attention from local buyers than the country, as the experience of the out-of-town operators, having been unsatisfactory, they take up foreign only to fill a special requirement.

Advices from the South along the Atlantic Coast note slow movement and continued unsettled conditions. At New Orleans the market is reported active and there appears to be no recession in the demand since the opening of the season, dealers enjoying a steadily improving business on a sound basis of profit.

The mills are putting out considerable Japan on account of the prevailing low prices and the indications are that the enormous business of a few weeks ago is about to be repeated in equal, if not greater, volume. In the interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, trade conditions are unchanged, the mills still indifferent to the views of the planters.

Cables and correspondence from abroad note "rough rice" market irregular: "spot cleaned" quiet; "forward Burma" steady; "Siam" unchanged; "Saigon" neglected.

The hardware activities of the Quaker City are considered an important factor in the trade, and since the advent of the Simmons Co. branch house, which did a business of $3,000,000 last year, new life, spirit and renewed interest is characterizing every move of both the local manufacturers and jobbers.

As Memphis is the great lumber market of the South, the new stock of large circular and band saws will be a convenience to the camps and mills of Tennessee and Arkansas. The increasing demand for these goods necessitated the establishment of the branch, and since the first of the year the sales have been very satisfactory. The Simonds Co. is one of the leading saw manufacturers in the country, and their product occupies a unique status with retail merchants.

Dry Goods and Notions

Foreign Manufacturers Absorb American Tariff Reductions.

Foreign textile manufacturers have advanced their prices to equal the reduction effected by the reduction in the present tariff law. It is the old story in this respect and it is not expected German goods will cut any more figure in this market than heretofore.

Buying Foreign Hosiery to be Finished in this Country.

The statement in last week's issue of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" that an importing jobber had requested bids from domestic manufacturers to finish, box and label a quantity of German-made hosiery, coming in the gray, so as to be placed on the market as American goods, aroused the interest of the trade. The chief of a leading house, on having his attention called to the incident, said: "I have heard of such practice, but seldom. Under the tariff, that admits unfinished or goods in the gray to come in at a lower duty rate than when complete, the advantage is appreciable.

"Considering the crowded condition of our mills the chance of a manufacturer accepting or looking for such orders is remote. Maybe a factory may not be busy in its finishing department and hence would entertain an offer of this kind, but it is doubtful. The story sounds like the scheme of a prominent Chicago company which has factories in the South, and have brought goods in the gray to the Northern mills to be finished, as the mills down there are not so well equipped for the work nor have they the skilled labor. If foreign-made hosiery is brought in this condition and for the purpose recited it is a new development and we shall look it up and take some action, as it is a serious charge and should be investigated. So far as my personal knowledge goes, however, and as our old friend Shakespeare says, the practice on the part of the American manufacturer is "more honored in the breach than in the observance."

Probably No Hosiery Reductions Before Fall, if Then.

Merchants who handle hosiery—they are interested to a man—need look for no reduction in prices this spring, and perhaps not in the fall engagements. Possibly by the spring of 1915 foreign-made hosiery may be shaded, but only on cotton and mercerized goods of German extraction. This is the view of several of the best known hosiery men in the country, and what they say may be accepted as authoritative. At the present time the American knitting mills are swinging along at a gait never before reached in the domestic trade, they state; every department is running full capacity and in many instances the factories in the recognized centres of production are obliged to operate over time as a rule.

In anticipation of European makers coming into this market with the cheaper grades of hosiery, the American manufacturer is bending every effort to develop his s lines; and they are "getting th with four feet," as one enthusias jobber phrased it. "You see," c tinued the same authority—an pert with a world-wide knowle of the business—"Americans too much in a hurry to turn out kind of hosiery for which Germa is justly famous. There is no minimizing or denying this fa The German textile worker is ne pushed for production; but he i marvel when it comes to close tention to the minutest details in knitting and dyeing of goods fr low price material. "In full-fashioned hosiery Germans also excel, but the sea less goods are beyond them. T subjects of the Kaiser have tri to imitate the seamless lines, a have 'fallen down' bad. Ribbons Above Last Year.

bbon prices are generally on a er basis than a year ago. Style rations in the fall lines are ded, but faille and grosgrain es are the leaders. In colors seems to be a wide choice, but er shades will prevail—deep ns and myrtle greens super- g the vivid spring and summer rences. Belting ribbons of e grosgrain weaves, in widths 5, 22 and 40 lines, are being by high class trade. The run ibbons will continue, and one ng Fifth avenue authority s that it would not surprise to see a continuing vogue of ears in these goods. The mar- ket is in excellent shape, as stocks have been reduced and the demand largely increased over last year, so much so that it may be a question whether deliveries can be made on time. Salesmen are now going out to show their imported and domestic lines to merchants.

National Hosiery Convention.

At the annual convention of the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers, in Philadelphia, May 11th to 15th, the usual exhibition of products, processes, appliances, etc., will be held. The pressure for space has already become so great that larger quarters than are offered by the First Regiment Armory may become a necessity, as over eighty firms have made reservations. The event promises to be notable in various ways.

Fourth National Textile Exhibition.

Mechanics' Building, Boston, will accommodate the fourth National Textile Exhibition, April 27th to May 2d, and it is to be more complete in every detail than any previous affair. Several associations of National character in that important line will hold their yearly conventions at the same time and place. It is figured there will be several thousand mill men from New England and other sections in attendance.

Weather Makes Slow Retailing.

Due in great part to the unpropitious weather, spring trade at retail is slow in developing, and there is a strong disposition to confine the merchants' buying engagements to small lots for quick sale. Jobbers did not have a wholly satisfactory February on this account. The small repeat orders that are coming in are being encouraged more than they were a year or two ago.

Better Buying Noted for Underwear and Hosiery.

An improvement in the buying of underwear and hosiery is noticeable, and specifications on fall orders for the former are coming in more freely. The cold snap and severe storms enabled retailers to lift more of their heavy weight stock, and they are feeling better about renewing interest in spring lines. There does not seem to be any immediate prospect of lower prices in foreign linens. Values of the coarse, domestic linens are disappointing after the lower tariff rate became effective.

Silk Outlook Active.

Present indications are that silks of all kinds will be bought heavily during the next six months. Manufacturers and jobbers are preparing for the demand, as silks are fashionable both in piece goods and ribbons, and prices are hardening, owing to light stocks and large operations in the primary markets.

A brief and pointed opinion on the matter is from Geo. A. Weiman, of Lord & Taylor's wholesale

New Wash Goods.

In the new goods that are being shown of printed wash fabrics, the cloths of fancy weave in neat floral designs are the most interesting to buyers. Jouet effects are still very popular and are likely to be worn a great deal in summer dresses. Some of the new fashions in gowns are worked out very satisfactorily where fine printed crepes with ratine stripes or checks are used.

New Organdie Retailing at Popular Price.

A smart fabric of fine organdie construction is not likely to be offered in suitable lots before late in the spring. It is finished very soft and printed in neat small flowers or figures, coming in yard widths and retailing at 35 cents. When first shown last week the ready-to-wear makers snapped up everything in sight. Several buyers of the best known Western jobbers who usually set the style in fine cottons in their sections placed heavy orders for these goods on the first appearance. The retail merchant with an eye to getting a line on good sellers may make a note of this for immediate action.

Quilts in Good Demand.

Reports from distributing points state that there is a retail demand, increasing of late, for quilts of the cheap satin and the very high priced qualities. Crinkled fancies and cheap crocheted goods are neglected. Special grades and the higher priced goods are firm, with the medium and low qualities being shaded by the mills. Retailers are also inquiring for white goods, the call being for novelties and suitings, fine checks and fine stripes on sheer grounds in white.

Crepes Selling Well.

The best selling goods, jobbers say, are of the crepe order. Fine plisses and fine plain and fancy crepes are wanted in white piece dyes and printed effects. Crepe ratines are also in favor. Though retailers are not ordering in quantities, as yet, but the specifications are for immediate shipment. It is believed there will be a rush for ratines in April and May, a repetition of last spring's buying in these goods. An abundance of French novelties is attested by the large importations, and in order to move goods of this description that have been held at high figures, prominent retailers are slashing prices savagely. The general merchant, however, is not called upon to sacrifice profits in like manner as his merchandising is all attuned to sane methods.

Good Western Dry Goods Business.

Chicago advices are of a sustained retail demand for dry goods, and shipments are larger than they were a year ago. Easter and spring business will be featured by a taxing of productions in the stylish novelties, especially in ribbons and laces. In the latter it will be a problem of manufacturers, jobbers and importers to take care of the large demand of flouncings and ruffling edges in widths of five inches and over.

Hosiery Stocks Not so Large.

Stocks of hosiery in first hands are not so large but that a spurt in buying by the retailers would quickly bring them to normal. Jobbers, with the price questions naturally prominent at present, would like to have deliveries deferred for a time. There is a larger inquiry for colors. In silk hose the current demand is for special colors, such as taupes, green and other high shades. White in cheap stockings,

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

The Blizzard of '88 had the one of 1914 beat many ways—for terror. We got to the store the second day and everybody was sitting around talking fool talk. The kid among them sneaked down cellar and got together every soiled can of condensed milk—every old and odd brand and every can of dead stock he could lay his hands on and piled them up inside the front door. As the stock in this particular store was very carelessly kept the number figured away up in the hundreds.

It was a hungry time—that week of '88—and people bought right and left anything in the shape of food that was not spoiled. The whole business was cleaned up and that was the "kid clerk's" first big boost.

This is a true story and is related here so that it may in some future day come to the mind of one of you boys to go and do likewise. It also illustrates the importance of thinking. He who doesn't think doesn't grow.

Friday Night.—In a certain store it is the rule to close the doors as usual at 6 Friday night, but the force remain till 8 for the purpose of putting up orders and getting the store in shape for the Saturday business.

Two of the men refused to comply with this rule. They both lost their jobs. There was no alternative. They were both good men—good, well trained salesmen, knew their business, always looked neat and clean, and were both honest fellows and both getting good wages.

They asserted their "independence," but it was not "independence" in the real sense. Not at all. Refusing to throw in a couple hours work a week for the good of the cause is plain, ordinary ignorance—stupidity if you like. Because a man's service in the grocery business is largely valued by the amount of loyalty he displays and the little and big acts of unselfishness he shows from day to day. The most effectual way to get out of line of promotion is to develop indifference and to balk at a little overtime. The ambitious clerk always falls in line.

This unbiased judgment is not y in first hands circles, but the rage merchant was skeptical and general public disbelievers. illiam M. The Retail Grocer is the logical distributor of Coffee, Tea, etc., and the L. H. Parke Co. is a consistent worker to aid him by all honorable means, and the Parke Stamp Line of Coffee, Tea, Spice, Extracts and other products helps merchants most effectively. The sales on the Parke Stamp Line for one day in one store of an enthusiastic retailer were:

Manufacturers About to Send Out New Samples.

With the close of February the manufacturers have settled upon and made up samples of their shoe lines, and these will be placed before the retail merchants during the next few weeks. As has been remarked before, the designers are inclined to suppress their inclination toward freaks for men and women, in the interest of the dealer. It is expected women's models will continue to reflect every taste and no taste. The line in number and style presented by some manufacturers, aided and abetted by the jobber in not a few instances, is remarkable, to express it mildly, from a selling point of view. The travelers from these houses may mislead the retailer to stock up his goods on the argument that the lines shown are the last word in shoe designing. If the goods are radical departures from accepted standards the merchant is justified in "passing them up." Play safe and take no chances is an excellent rule for the retailing buyer to observe.

Factories Working Full—Season at Height.

It is the height of the season with shoe manufacturers in the different centres throughout the country, and the factories are working a full complement of operators. That is to say, when the services of workers in certain specialty lines can be had. For, curious as it may seem, there is a scarcity of "turned" goods mechanics, who are in strong need to meet the current demand for dancing shoes. One manufacturer, whose products are sold in every State of the Union and abroad, has been and is still advertising for help of this kind at an expense of $250 weekly in every shoe manufacturing community, and with no great success, it is learned.

A number of the firms referred to, in speaking of this peculiar state of affairs in the labor market to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," said: "The present dancing furore has created a pressing demand for dancing shoes of every description. The sole of such a shoe must be light, flexible and strong, and is known in the trade as the turned shoes. That is to say, the sole is finished on both sides; rather on one side and then turned to complete the work. No insole is used, as in the welt sole, that is, finished on one side only. Work of this kind has fallen off during the past eight or ten years, and operators have equipped themselves in other special lines, so that with the existing insistent demand the turned shoe men are not to be obtained so readily as in former times.

"We make a complete line of dancing shoes, with a specialty of rubber disks in the sole—ten small disks, of exclusive material and pattern, and so arranged as not to be unsightly. Another new thing this season is the use of white leather soles for white shoes. We claim to have originated this style, though a number of other manufacturers have followed our lead. At any rate the white soles will be distinctive in the new spring and summer models. The employment of fabrics for uppers is the latest note in ladies' shoes, French brocade, in various colors, small fancy patterns preferred, being the very newest material. Shiny leather is in big and heavy demand also and has come to stay for a while. We have 400 and 500 different styles in ladies' shoes, from the best to the lower priced goods, but we bear on quality throughout the range of the entire line.

"Eight hundred men are employed, and we could use many hundred more if we had the factory room and facilities. We own a good piece of property across the street, and while we intend to build a new plant there, just now we have no time to give it proper attention. The export trade is growing fast, and we export quantities of goods to England, France, South Africa and Australia, and maintain offices in London and Paris, but have no traveling men abroad. Eight salesmen cover every section of the Union. We are shipping out orders for the spring and summer seasons as rapidly as possible, and on April 1st our men are out in the trade showing our new fall styles, the sample line being about finished. They remain in the field for three months, and from then on we are busy delivering the goods up to December 1st, when the winter season is over."

Local Shoe Dealers Adopt Same Spring Opening Day.

Quite a commendable idea, from its novelty, one worthy of adoption by merchants in the smaller cities and towns, is the display made by the shoe retailers of Kalamazoo, Mich., several days before Easter. The first exhibit of this kind was made last year, and so satisfactory and successful was this style show—a display of the new patterns in all makes on a simultaneous spring opening day—that Kalamazoo is making an effort to make it an annual event. Easter falls on April 12 this year, and Thursday, Friday and Saturday preceding could be utilized by retailers elsewhere for a trial of the Kalamazoo plan. It is to be remembered, a correspondent writes, that all the store window curtains on the new style displays go up in the morning at the same hour.

CCXLIX.—One Exception to the Rule That a Promise to Pay Another's Debt Must be in Writing to be Binding.

The following letter is worth reproducing and discussing:—

Paris, Ky., February 26, 1914.

Elton J. Buckley, Esq.

Dear Sir:—I have read with attention your remarks on what a creditor must do to hold some one who offers to go security for the debt of another, how the debt that he is to become security for must be clearly identified, and that the agreement to become security must be in writing. I note the great importance of this, and had I understood the fact that the consent to become security had to be in writing, I would have saved about $800 five years ago. Now what I wish to ask is, does the consent of the person going security always have to be in writing? For instance, I can see why it would have to be when the person going security for the debt of some other person does so only as a favor to that other person, but suppose he, the security, is mixed up in the debt in some way himself and get an extension of time from the creditor by agreeing to become personally liable for the debt? It seems to me that in that case the extension of time is a favor to him as well as to the real debtor, and that it does not make the same difference whether the consent is in writing. It seems to me that a lawyer told me something like this several years ago. I have a case like that now, where the consent was not in writing, and if it has to be I will lose over $200. The person owing the debt is a corporation which I was threatening to bring suit against. In order to get more time, the secretary of the corporation, who was a stockholder, agreed to pay the debt himself if the corporation did not do it by April 1, 1914. There was no writing, though there was a witness. I did not sue, on the strength of that, and the corporation was able to finish a contract and get paid some money. Am I safe in not having the promise in writing in this case?

Respectfully yours,
I. N. Coan.

As I said in a former article, the promise of one person to be responsible for the debt of another should always be in writing. This is so whether the person promising is "mixed up in the debt" or not. It is always safer. However, in the case presented by this correspondent, I believe I can hold out some hope that he may be able to collect from the secretary of the corporation, in spite of the fact that the promise was not in writing. Cases like that, where the person going security is, to use the correspondent's language again, "mixed up with the debt himself," form almost the only exception to the rule that a promise to be responsible for the debt of another must be in writing or it will not be binding.

A leading case lays down the principle thus:—

> Whenever the main purpose and object of the person promising to be responsible for the debt of another, is not to answer for another, but to subserve some pecuniary or business purpose of his own, involving either a benefit to himself or damages to the other contracting party, his promise is not the ordinary promise to answer the debt of another and need not be in writing, though it may be in form a provision to pay the debt of another person.

To apply this, take the case sketched by this correspondent. A is a corporation owing a debt to B. A is in bad shape and any attempt to force it to pay will doubtless end in bankruptcy and the stockholders will lose their money. A believes that if its creditors can be induced to hold off a little longer it can raise some funds and come out all right. B refuses to wait and is about to enter suit. C, the secretary and a stockholder, then comes forward and agrees to be personally responsible for the debt provided B will wait the desired time. B refrains from entering suit. Now that is the precise case described by this correspondent, and it is typical of thousands where the person who agrees to become security, provided credit is extended, or provided the debtor is given more time to pay, has some personal interest in the matter outside of friendship for the debtor. If the corporation in the Kentucky case fails to pay on April 1st—I hardly think I should have fixed that date—I have no doubt that the secretary can be compelled to keep his verbal promise to pay the debt himself. His interests were bound up with the interests of the corporation. He had money invested in it—he was a stockholder and an employee. Giving the corporation more time to recover itself, and possibly to escape from its trouble and become successful, was a favor to the secretary and to every other stockholder. I am clear that if he admits making the promise, no court anywhere would release him from it because it was not in writing. I say again, however, that it would have been safer to get this and every other such promise in writing.

Here is something from the decision in the same case from which I have quoted above:—

> A promise by the president treasurer of a corporation, who also stockholders and creditors it, to pay the debt within a stated, if creditors would not ther proceed against the corp tion, does not need to be in w ing to be binding.

There are plenty of cases a person agrees to go securit another from some reason ou of friendship. Where it is a case of friendship or where th curity has no individual intere the debt, there are no exceptio the rule—the promise must writing.

Getting Things Right.

Young housekeepers of little experience often ask their favorite grocers for the best coffee, the best tea, the best thing for dessert, and other best things, and the best grocers give them exactly what they want, because it is best to do so.

How many grocers are there, who being asked for the best dessert preparation, would furnish anything but with its famous pure fruit flavors? Well, not many.

The high quality and low price of Jell-O adapt it to every class of trade, which accounts for the fact that "America's most famous dessert" is as popular in stores where it is sold as in homes where it is made up into delicious desserts.

The Southwestern District convention sent a long petition of protest to the Philadelphia association in favor of changing the dates of the convention from September as fixed to late in August.

The interest in the Philadelphia convention is growing and it is confidently expected that there will be fully one thousand delegates present if the date is accepted.

Place your orders early for the first of this product which we will have every Thursday, Friday and Saturday during the Bock Wurst Season

Following our custom of the past several years we will cook this sausage instead of marketing it in a raw state, which will not only make it less perishable and cause it to stand shipping better, but will make the preparation thereof, much easier.

DIRECTIONS

Cut links apart. Cut the casing lengthwise on two sides with the point of a sharp knife. Remove the casing by pulling it from end to end, by which method the meat will not adhere.

Brown a piece of butter in a pan, then fry the sausage long enough to heat it through, meanwhile gently shaking the pan. Serve hot.

When ordering your Easter Hams and Bacon remember that BURK'S are well trimmed, mild cured and from superior quality hogs

Two St. Patrick's Day Trims

March the seventeenth, St. Patrick's Day, will be next on the list for an occasion to have some very attractive windows. Take advantage of the two designs illustrated below.

No. 1.

To arrange the shamrock window, first make a narrow platform in the centre of the window—the whole length of it. A board about twelve inches wide will answer the purpose. Have it about ten or twelve inches high. From the edge of this make a slant of another board to the bottom of the window along the glass. Then make another slant at the rear in the same manner. This all done, cover the entire bottom of the window with bright green crepe paper. Cut some pasteboard in long strips; have them about one and a half inches wide, using only the soft, thin kind, that bends and does not break. Cover the strips with the green crepe paper. Now measure the strips to get them all even and bend to form shamrocks. With long, strong pins, pushed in slanting to hold them in place, fasten to the slant in front and fill them with choice dried green peas. On the platform place bottles of pickles and olives. Arrange the shamrocks on the rear slant in the same manner and fill them with green tea. Cut some of the green crepe paper in long strips about two inches wide, twi arrange in each corner, as in illustration. Cut a large shamroc of cardboard and cover with the green paper. Cut some letters yellow glazed paper and paste them on the shamrock.

No. 2.

The fresh fish and potato display is arranged in this m Cover the bottom of the window with green crepe paper. I centre in front place a small shamrock, as in illustration, and m the same way described in the other article. Back of this place a pyramid of choice potatoes and at each side place celery as in cu the centre at the rear, on a large pan, place a block of ice, on place a choice fresh fish. Garnish it with slices of lemon. Place sponges between the pan and the ice; they will absorb the wat can be squeezed out as often as necessary. Around the edge pan place heads of lettuce. Nail a strip of wood across the rear window, about in the centre, and tack alternate strips of yello green crepe paper on this. The cut illustrates four yellow and green. Finish at the top with twisted strips of the green and y paper. The dark ones in the illustration are green. Have a s price on all the goods displayed.

Wholesale Grocers of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, Hold Stirring Convention at Philadelphia

F. Butler Reeves, Jr., of Philadelphia, elected President. Live Topics Discussed. Declare for Jobber as Distributing Medium and for Uniform Food Laws. Close with Big Banquet at Adelphia Hotel.

The eighth annual convention of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware convened at the Hotel Adelphia last Wednesday, promptly at 2 o'clock, President H. G. Kurtz in the chair. About 150 members or members' representatives were present.

As Dr. W. Q. Roselle did not arrive, James Hewitt pronounced the invocation.

Mr. Kurtz next read a letter from Mayor Blankenburg, the substance of which follows:—

> Dear Mr. Graves:—I find it impossible to open the meeting of the Wholesale Grocers' Association at 2.15 owing to an important official engagement. I regret very much that I cannot be present, but I have asked Director Porter to represent the city and present my compliments and offer in my name a hearty welcome to this city.

Dircctor Porter said: "I rather think the Mayor was afraid to come here to-day because he imagined this might be a disorderly crowd and therefore selected me because I have charge of the police force. I am sure, however, if he were here he'd change his mind.

"He directs me to give you hearty greetings to Philadelphia on this the eighth annual convention of your association. He wants you to feel free in this great city of homes.

"A short time ago I was told a story of a man who went to a hotel and asked for the best room. The proprietor showed him to a room, the man went to bed but awoke the next morning bleary-eyed and haggard. Upon the proprictor's asking him if he had had a pleasant night's rest, the man answered 'Worst room I ever slept in.' 'My dear sir,' said the proprietor, 'as President Roosevelt has occupied that room I didn't think you could object to it.' 'Well,' returned the man, 'I don't object to Roosevelt alone, but I draw the line at the whole Progresivc Party.'

"You and I in our respective lines are bugs. Nowadays mcn are really bugs about the things concerning them most. In these days, talking of big things, men in all walks of life gather together in convention to talk about the things nearest to them.

"I notice in your programme that the purpose of your convention is practical education. Then you go on to say that the best way to accomplish results is to keep posted. Attendance at conventions brings this about along with good will and confidence.

"It is significant that practically every branch of business to-day has developed in its particular line an educational feature of this kind. A number of business houses to-day make it a part of their establishment to have educational advantages in their line for employees. Here in this city we have a school for our police, one for our firemen, etc.

"Employees in all lines are being educated to do their work in a way entirely satisfactory to everybody.

"In closing wish to say for my own part that Philadelphia does welcome you. The old saying that the keys of the city are in your hands is not quite true because the keys are lost, but the old latch string always hangs out for the first fellow to grab.

"We are proud of Philadelphia, etc. People here enjoy life. We want not only home folks but those who come here from beyond confines to find it enjoyable.

"We mean every word we say and if there is anything the administration can do to make you gentlemen feel at home I want you to call on us. Regret exceedingly the Mayor himself could not be here to welcome you."

James Hewitt, delivering the address of welcome, said: "I was just thinking when Director Porter was speaking whether to class myself as a humbug or some other kind of a bug. We will let that pass, however. Certainly Philadelphia grocers are proud to have you with them. We have spent time and careful preparation to give you one of the best conventions, we hope, that we have ever had and that is saying a great deal. We remember with a great deal of pleasure the time we were your guests at Harrisburg, Wilmington, Wilkes-Barre, Easton, and it has made us all the more desirous to return in somewhat the goodfellowship and good times we have had. We have prepared a good programme and with the possible exception of one of the papers I am sure you will enjoy them all.

"Philadelphia has been represented by Director Porter, but I do feel like saying further that you have come to a city where the grocery trade is a matter of expert knowledge. This is the city where we find the great chain stores. This is the city where we find the great cash stores, strong and flourishing. This is the city where you find the greatest retail buying exchange that there is and we humble grocers try to find one way ever so carefully through this awful maze and wonder where we will come out, but I believe we will struggle through to success some day.

"I need not say anything more than this, except to again thank you for such good numbers and to hope you will enjoy your stay with us and take home something that will be profitable for your business."

The response was given by William A. Hannigan, Wilmington, Del., who said:—

"I want to say that the delight and pleasure of Mr. Hewitt and our Philadelphia friends at having us here is far outmeasured by our keen pleasure in being here. We feel that you have a very great city for more reasons than one. First of all as American citizens we feel that you have in Philadelphia the freest city in the land. Within possibly a stone's throw from where we are assembled was called together the first and greatest convention of all times which has stamped upon Philadelphia a name that will be handed down to posterity.

"Mr. Hewitt has made it possible for you and your Philadelphia colleagues to be the leaders in one of its greatest industries. Secondly we appreciate and esteem Philadelphia as the birthplace of our own Tri-State Wholesale Grocers' Association. We, the jobbers of these three States, were glad to be at the first convention held in Philadelphia. Now in holding that convention we assume some of the spirit that is so common to Philadelphia and which we think so well of. That is the spirit of brotherly love. This is simply a meeting of this association in the spirit of goodfellowship and for educational purposes Tri-State Association has done a wonderful amount of good. We can only feel that our advancement in the wholesale grocery business must come from an exchange of ideas.

"On behalf of the Delaware members of the Tri-State Association I thank you for your generous hospitality and the welcome given us. Only hope Director Porter will not have any use for his department for us."

There was no roll call; over 100 were present.

The reading of minutes was by vote dispensed with.

The president then delivered his annual address:—

> The desire for education and the disposition to educate is stronger to-day than at any time in the history of the grocery business. During the past year this business in which we are engaged has been discussed from as many points of view as there are different breakfast foods on the market. These editorials, addresses and other articles have been both educational and helpful to those who have given them careful consideration.

Leggett & Co. Remove and Consolidate Its Enterprises. New Oleo Bill Reported Favorably. National Jobbers and Canners Get Together on Specifications. Various Trade Items and Market Summary.

Special Correspondence of "Modern Merchant and Grocery World."

New York, March 11, 1914.

Announcement has been made in the last week of the coming removal of Francis H. Leggett & Co., and the consolidation of its various plants and departments under one roof, in a vast building, with ample room and in a most desirable location. The new location is on the North River front, between West 27th street and West 28th street, and on the premises of the Terminal Warehouse Co.

The company will occupy the western building on these premises, directly on the water front. The building is a nine-story structure. It has electric elevators, loading platforms and inside track connections with the railroads. The railroads which run direct tracks either into the building or alongside it are the Baltimore and Ohio, the Lehigh Valley, the Erie, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western and the New York Central.

The location is in the heart of the termini of the Atlantic steamship lines. The Panama line, which is to send steamships through the Panama Canal to the Pacific coast and the Far East, occupies a pier adjoining the western end of the building.

The company now occupies quarters in four locations, which has been made necessary in order to accommodate all of the departments. The main offices are at Franklin and Hudson streets, and the other quarters are scattered in that part of the city.

In the company's new building it will have its manufacturing plant, its own cold storage plant, warehouses, salesrooms and offices.

The development of the company's business has pointed for some time to the need of obtaining facilities such as are now to be provided and the change has been hastened by the work of the city in opening new streets which will cut through one of the company's present buildings, a ten-story structure.

The negotiations leading to the present deal were closed Friday last. In its announcement the company points out that with its increased facilities it will be in even a stronger position than in the past to develop and expand its business. It is to keep to the front the need of the highest standards of purity in food products. The improvement in terminal and other facilities on so vast a scale will also be a factor in bringing about economies in cost of manufacture and distribution and aiding in solving questions as to cost of living. Special attention is to be given to the social aspects of the company in its relation to employees and their welfare.

The grocery trade learned this week that a new oleomargarine bill had been introduced in the Legislature and pushed along the legislative path before the people in the trade woke up to the fact. It is supposed that the State Department of Agriculture has been backing the bill. The officials of the Department would probably resent any imtimation that they had been doing this quietly or secretly, but anyway they did not make much noise about it. No publicity was given to the measure outside of whatever routine publication was required.

The bill imposes an annual license fee of $500 on manufacturers, outside of the license fee that they now pay to the Federal Government. The bill also requires wholesale dealers to pay a fee of $250 and retailers a fee of $10, all fees being annual.

In the trade it is said that this bill, with such fees, would be almost prohibitive, as it would advance the cost of making and marketing the product to a point where it probably could not compete with butter. It is charged that this is the real object of the bill.

The bill has already been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and is duplicated in the Assembly.

In former years somewhat similar bills have been killed as a result of efforts by members of the trade, including representative retail grocers. It is likely that the retail grocers' associations will at once consider what action to take on the pending measure. The reports from Albany are that prompt action is necessary if the progress of the bill is to be checked.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association and the National Canners' Association are sending out to members notices giving the specifications adopted by the conference committee for standard containers of canned foods. The specifications are of the most detailed character.

The most important part of the specifications probably as concerns the interest of the retail trade will center in the following paragraphs in relations to the guarantee against spoils and swells and the general food guarantee:—

> Further agreements reached by the conference were as follows: "All goods guaranteed against spoils and swells until July 1st following date of shipment; after January 1st, six months from date of invoice. Packer's option to have goods returned at the expiration of the guaranty or whenever a quantity may have accumulated sufficient to make a freight shipment, except where prevented from returning by food officials, in which event buyer shall furnish certificate of disposition from food officials."
> No definite conclusion was reached regarding the food guaranty, and, although the discussion developed some wide differences of opinion as to the substance of the guaranty, the difference seemed to be more in the phraseology. During this convention the following was unanimously agreed upon by the committee representing the two associations: "I (we), the undersigned, do hereby guarantee that the goods this day sold by me (us) to ——— (here insert name of buyer), namely, ——— (here insert description of goods), are not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Act of Congress known as the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, and the amendments thereof now in force and the laws of the State where buyer is located and within the meaning of the laws of the State of ———, where said goods are produced; but this guaranty does not include the misbranding of goods sold under buyer's labels."

Thomas Martindale Places Blame for Sm Tea Consumption in This Country

Says Importers and Jobbers Are Neglecting Everything Might Make it Larger. Ought to Get Trade Papers Newspapers to Print More About Tea. Average Ret Doesn't Know Enough About Tea to Push it Intellige Importers and Jobbers Ought to Educate Him.

Mr. Thomas Martindale, the Philadelphia grocer, tea expert, author and publicist, made an address to the Tea Association of the United States, in New York, a few days ago, which they will probably remember for some time to come. In discussing and explaining the reason why the per capita consumption of tea in this country is so much less than in England and other countries, Mr. Martindale charged it to the inaction of the tea men themselves.

Some crisp extracts from the address are here reproduced:—

> I urge the members of the tea trade to get together and "do things," and my first suggestion is for the appointment of a committee for the purpose of supplying information to the newspapers and trade papers. The consumption of tea in this country can only be increased by means of advertising. The retail grocer must be educated and so must the consumer. It is up to the importers to teach them how to prepare tea and to cultivate the taste for better grades of tea. If this is done, all of you will make more money.

In England the consumption tea is four times that of the Un States. In this country only out of a hundred hotels and rest rants served tea which is fit drink. In England and Russia la sums of money are spent for adv tising tea, while in this cou practically everything is advert excepting tea.

You can do very little without vertising, and an effort ought to made to get articles about tea newspapers and trade papers. Th papers print very little about now. The fault is not with th but with you. You merchants not supply the matter. When reporter calls on you, you me say "there's nothing special." that "business is inactive," and t urally the newspaper prints v little about the tea trade. Look at coffee trade write-ups. The d account in one New York pa alone is from a column and a l to two columns, and they are w reading. On Monday the New Y "Journal of Commerce" devo four full pages to groceries, everything of interest to groc was covered excepting tea. and not the newspaper is to bla for the absence of articles on

A committee appointed to le after tea trade news could ren valuable service. Such a comm tee, with the association in back it, could furnish material not o to grocery trade publications, ıe daily press and to National ızines. Interesting articles con- ng the growth, cultivation and aration of tea would be used ewspapers. These could serve ducate the housewife, who d be induced to buy teas in rence to other articles.

e worst thing about tea is that etail grocer doesn't know any- about tea. The importers and distributors should advertise he purpose of encouraging the ıg and selling of higher grade By circulars or by traveling you should conduct a campaign ucation among hotel men. Tell not to boil tea, and to use a grade. Retail grocers might vised that they can make more y by handling better teas.

ile the consumption of coffee ncreased in this country, the ımption of tea is the same. public must be educated to tea. Just think of the suc- Charles Post has had with his ım—all due to advertising. My ience has been that when a ın has bought two packages of ım she stops, but still Mr. Post ges to keep up the sale of his m. Sell Her a Whole Container of Franklin Carton Sugar

When you sell a woman a whole CONTAINER of 24 or 30 CARTONS of FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR, instead of selling her one CARTON, you prevent her buying the other 23 or 29 CARTONS from a competitor. She's your customer; nobody else can sell her any sugar for some time. She has a supply instead of a sample. You have only one delivery to make, instead of perhaps dozens. You make the profit on every carton in one sale without even having to open the container, although you can do that in five seconds with a pocket knife. A Most Radical Decision.

The New York State Court of Appeals has just made a most radical decision regarding the coloring of oleo. The bare facts were published last week. Peter H. Van Kamper, a retail grocer, sold a pound of uncolored oleo and gave with it a bottle of color. The Department of Agriculture prosecuted him and he was fined $100, under a comparatively new law which forbids a dealer from giving color with oleo. Van Kampen appealed on the ground that the law was unconstitutional; he sold the oleo itself in a perfectly legal way, and his right to give color with it so that the purchaser could color it, if he preferred it colored, could not be taken from him by a State law. This position seems unanswerable, but the Court of Appeals set it aside, and said the law was good. The following extracts from the argument of the Attorney-General, which the court upheld, will show the basis of the decision:—

> Mr. Carmody held that the law was a reasonable and necessary police legislation and was designed to prevent fraud. He contended that by means of this yellow coloring matter the purchaser would be able to color oleomargarine so that it would look like and appear to be butter. He pointed out that the law does not prohibit the selling, giving away or delivering of this coloring matter at any time except at the precise time of the sale of the oleo.
> It was pointed out that the agricultural law prohibited coloring oleomargarine with any coloring matter and for that reason, there being a direct prohibition of the statute against coloring oleomargarine, it is reasonable and proper for the Legislature to make provision that a purchaser should not be given coloring matter at the time oleomargarine is sold. Such an act on the part of a storekeeper, the State contended, amounts practically to an inducement for at least a suggestion to the purchaser that he violate the law.

This decision seems pretty nearly the legal equivalent of a ruling that a consumer of oleo cannot color it yellow if he prefers it that way. One can scarcely imagine a court ruling against such a right on the part of the consumer, and if the consumer has a legal right to use the color, why has not the dealer a corresponding right to sell it to him to use? There is only one way to answer this question as the New York Appeal Court has answered it, and that is upon the premise that yellow coloring matter for use in oleo is an outlaw product and can not be used by anybody, either dealer or consumer. The New York court does not put its decision on this ground, but how else can its position be justified?

Distorted and Ignorant Ideas of Business.

Newspaper and magazine writers who sit down to write about business problems, with no real business experience, can be spotted always by a real business man. They write stuff which to the posted reader reveals in every line crass ignorance as to the practices and customs of business houses.

Last Sunday's Philadelphia "North American" contained a good illustration. In an unsigned article purporting to be written by a business man, he tells how he entered the employ of a furniture house with no furniture and little general business experience. He stayed there several years, evolving from time to time ideas for the improvement of the business, which when submitted were all turned down. Finally this doubtless worthy employee, who had not been able to convince his house that he had any special ability, had an interview with his firm which he describes as follows:—

> One day I had proposed a new article of furniture, which I was sure would make a tremendous success if we got it on the market. I knew that other houses were preparing a similar piece of furniture, and I knew also that my idea would prove the biggest seller. So I went into the office and put the matter up to the heads of the firm. They turned me down again. I banged the table with my blue prints, and shouted: "Confound it all! Give me full charge of this plant and I'll double your profit in eighteen months. If I don't, I'll admit you were right, and you won't owe me any salary for my next year's work. I've got the making of your success here, and you won't see it. You sit up here so thoroughly respectable and content that the world turns around under you, and leaves you still bragging on the methods of twenty years' antiquation."

As the above writer admits, the result of this was "startling." They at once fired their manager, as to whom they had no complaint, sent him on the road, and appointed the above writer manager. Then they sat back and watched the new man "fire workmen right and left." "I got in a corps of younger, more active people. I paid them big salaries."

That is probably enough. It is clearly one of those imaginative, how-to-win-in-business fakes that are being written every day by men who were never in business in their lives. That no prosperous business house, uninspired with confidence in a given employee, could be induced, under any circumstances, to give that employee a managerial position occupied by a perfectly competent man, whom they demoted and sent on the road; and furthermore that they could see their old employees "fired right and left" and new ones at higher salaries brought in, is as clear as anything can be. Such things don't happen, and stories that seem to make them happen put false ideas of business in minds simple enough to believe them.

A $10,000 Advertisement Given Free.

From time to time the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has discussed the indirect advertising which it is possible for merchants to get and its very great value as compared with ordinary paid advertising, which has come to be largely discounted by everybody.

Another illustration:—

In Philadelphia there is an organization of society women called The Civic League. A branch of it is the Chestnut Hill Civic League, which is particularly noted for the financially substantial character of its members.

Recently a committee of the Chestnut Hill body was appointed to visit local slaughter houses and report on their condition, so that members might have some practical information as to whose products were good, whose were bad, and whose were indifferent. One day last week this committee reported. The chairwoman came to the meeting in a splendid limousine, and a liveried chauffer fowed her up the aisle bearing furs. Evidently a woman of wea and position. When her turn ca to report she stood up and de ered to that keenly interested semblage of buyers, the finest i advertisement for the pack house of Louis Burk that it had in its long experience.

She said in substance that committee had examined all local slaughter houses, but found that of Louis Burk far advance of the others in point cleanliness and sanitation, and would henceforth use the B products herself and confide recommend them to everyb else! Ten thousand dollars pr ably would not have bought t advertisement as a business pro sition; it was given freely, no an advertisement at all, thoug had that effect, but as a piec information and suggestion to c sumers.

Why did it come? Simply cause the Burk house deserve That is the only way to get indi advertising that has any las value.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The Corby-Cobb Co. has been pointed Philadelphia agent for California Walnut Growers' A ciation, an organization of six smaller associations.

The Childs Grocery Co. began to open stores in Phila phia, and has already pla eleven. Its stores have hith been in New Jersey and in suburbs. Opinions are variou to why the Childs Co. has c into an already overcrowded r ket. Some say it is in reve for the Acme Tea Co. for going to New Jersey, but if it is this revenge is tardy, for the Acme has been in New Jersey for ab four years. New chain store Philadelphia would not appea be a good business propositi but the Childs Co. evidently lieves the contrary.

We would be pleased to have for publication in this column the ideas of our readers upon trade topics, ag understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for any views expressed therein. All com- ations must be accompanied by the writer's name and address as an evidence of good faith, but not arily for publication. All inquiries within our power to answer will also be noticed in this department.

Dear Sir:—As a subscriber to your paper I take the liberty of requesting a favor of you. Will you please look up the record of the Retail Protective Co., 431 Dearborn street, Rooms 528-31, Manhattan Building, of Chicago, Ill. This firm is one of the numerous collecting concerns and specializes in collecting grocers' accounts on a commission basis. They have no local agent, but do business by mail. Of course, I do not object to your publishing this request in "Correspondence" column of your paper. Should you see fit to do so, please omit my name. Perhaps certain other readers of the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" will be benefited by this question and your reply to same. Kindly answer at your earliest convenience and be assured that your efforts in our behalf will be greatly appreciated.

We know pretty much all the collection agencies, but the "Retail Protective Co." is a new one. Has any subscriber ever heard of it? You can judge a collection agency to a certain extent by its contract. Send a copy along and we will gladly give you an opinion on it.

Of course, even if the contract is unobjectionable, there is still the question—is it honest—and will it turn in the money it collects?

Doing $40,000 a Year With Two Clerks and No Bookkeeper.

Washington, D. C., March 9, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—To begin with the most important part of this communication, I call your attention to inclosed check for two years' subscription to your paper, even though you are like most of the old-time grocers of this city, "trying to get out of the grocery business," for which I cannot blame you, as my experience has taught me many things about it that are by no means desirable.

However, I did not have to overcome a past experience of getting money easy, having held but one position in my life prior to "hanging out my shingle," and at that time was drawing down the enormous salary of $11 per week, and I think this fact has something to do with keeping me plugging at it for over twelve years, so that at this time I am doing an annual business of $40,000, without a bookkeeper and with but two clerks, one porter, a chauffeur and myself.

I am now occupying a building that should be condemned, being so damp that cereals and washing powders and goods of that class become damaged in a very short time, and the owner will not make repairs, having stated that if I "did not choose to remain here with the building in its present condition, to make the repairs (at my expense) or move out."

I have purchased a lot on this same street, two squares east of this location, but not a corner, there being none vacant, but it is next to the corner and has a frontage of 25 feet, and I propose to build the full width, and 60 feet deep. Have not quite decided whether to build a store one story, with cellar, or to put two stories above, each to contain an apartment of six rooms, bath and pantry.

Taking advantage of your "Service Department," I am sending on inclosed slip a list of the fixtures I have, all of which are good, though I think of getting a new meat refrigerator, this one being too low for the proposed new store, and the counters, shelving, bins, etc., I am using belong to this building. I would like your advice in regard to the merits and prices of the different makes of refrigerators, butchers' supplies and bins, together with any suggestions you may be able to offer that will make the store more convenient or reduce the cost.

Thanking you in advance, I am,
Yours truly,
JOHN BRAYSHAW, JR.

20—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because if you don't you are deliberately throwing away thousands of dollars' worth of benefit which manufacturers are paying for.

¶ This is simple and fundamental, but a surprising number of retailers do not see it. For instance, a manufacturer advertises in the Saturday Evening Post, which is sure to have readers in your town. Every person who sees the advertisement and is impressed by it, is a possible buyer for your store. If the advertisement has any weight, every reader of it is more or less persuaded that he should buy something which he must come to your store or some other store to get.

¶ Multiply this instance by all the nationally advertised products and again by all the periodicals which are read in your town, and you have an idea of this enormous influence which is continuously working to send business to you. But no such influence works for non-nationally advertised goods.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

We should build the building three stories high and rent out the two upper floors. A large number of retailers have done this when they built new buildings and have found that once their upper floors are rented, their proposition cost much less to carry. If you did not have the extra money for the second and third floors, it could easily be borrowed on mortgage, once the first story is built. There is, of course, some risk in not being able to rent the apartments.

Working to Reduce Letter Postage and Keep Down Parcels Post.

Erie, Pa., March 4, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—We are co-operating with the National One-Cent Letter Postage Association for one-cent letter postage, to which we are committed by resolution of our convention.

Hon. John H. Bankhead, chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, is putting up a strenuous fight for the purpose of removing from the Postmaster-General the power of increasing parcels post weight and extending zone limits until he has had time to ascertain the present cost of the service. While we are fighting to have each class of mail pay the cost of its service, we are fearful that if the parcels post weights are increased and the zone limits extended, there will soon be a loss on that class of mail also, which benefits the mail order houses and manufacturers who sell direct more than it does us.

Please write to Congressman Bankhead, Washington, D. C., commending his action. Do so at once. Get your members and their friends to do the same. It will do lots of good.

The One-Cent Letter Postage Association will authorize you to offer complimentary memberships in their association to those of your members whose postage accounts are less than $100 per year, and if you would like a lot of their complimentary blanks to send to your members, I will be glad to get them for you if you will communicate with me.

Please write Bankhead at once on your official stationery in manner suggested.

Yours truly,
A. M. HOWES,
Secretary Retail Merchants Association of Pennsylvania.

Starting a General Store.

Chester, Pa., March 5, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—A worthy young man of my acquaintance is contemplating starting in a merchandise business in some country town in the midst of a good agricultural district of about 2,000 to 3,000 inhabitants, location to be determined later, and he has requested me to aid him financially.

He proposed handling the following goods: enameled ware, tinware, all kinds of kitchen utensils, woodenware, brushes, stationery, notions, handkerchiefs, towels, hose, etc., a small line of dry goods, such as muslin, calico and ginghams, and novelties.

Now, I think in a country town that he ought to handle a small line of groceries to stimulate the sale of the other goods. I should think that groceries would bring people into the store, and while there they would no doubt see other things and buy them.

If you can spare the time I would appreciate very much your opinion on this matter. It will be of great benefit to me.

In the grocery business what percentage of sales will be net profit?

In your opinion, what is the smallest amount of grocery stock you would suggest in connection with the other goods?

His capital will be rather small.

He has not yet decided upon his location. If you have any suggestions to offer along this line, same will be appreciated.

Yours truly,
S. W. GREEN.

This is rather a difficult question to answer. We agree with you that your friend had better have a grocery department. The most successful general stores in country communities sell groceries. While he may not be able to do a sufficiently large grocery business to support him alone, it will be a filler and will undoubtedly be the means of bringing trade for his other lines.

Just how much money he should spend upon groceries depends upon two considerations: First, upon how much money he has to invest in his entire stock; and, second, the present condition of the grocery business in the community where he decides to locate. If this community is already served by a sufficient number of good grocery stores, then what he might find it profitable to do in the grocery line is quite different from what he might find it profitable to do if the community is not being well served by a sufficient number of grocery stores.

He ought to be able to make 10 per cent. net profit out of his grocery business under such circumstances as you outline. We cannot even guess as to "the smallest amount of grocery stock which he should put in," because you do not state how much money he has to spend on the entire stock. In many of these general stores the grocery department dominates, and the grocery stock is larger and more varied than the stock in any other line. Whether this should be so in his case depends very largely upon the conditions of the community in which he proposes to locate.

As to location, we regret that we do not consider it safe to make any suggestions.

Something About Insurance.

———, Pa., March 6, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—As I don't belong to any lodge or carry any life insurance nor accident, and thinking it would perhaps be advisable to have some protection as the majority of people do have one or more, I don't want to be talked into something of this kind by the agents of the different companies, as each one has something superior to the other, I concluded to write you about it and ask your opinion and advice on this question.

I am told by the agent representing a Western company called Old Line Bankers' Life Insurance Company, the rates on policies of the Western company are cheaper on account of money fetching a higher rate of interest than in the Eastern States. What is your opinion on this argument? Do you approve of life insurance on the endowment plan or would you rather have an accident policy? What is the difference in the plan of each? If you approve of life insurance and prefer West before East, please name your favorites? Thanking you for any information and advice, and ask you to please not print this inquiry, I remain,

Yours truly, * * * *

[This journal believes that if the name and address of the writer of the above are withheld, he will be willing to allow the question and its answer to be published, as the subject is of general interest.]

We agree with you that you should unquestionably carry life insurance protection of some kind.

We do not know the "Old Line Bankers' Life Insurance Company," but if it is selling insurance at cut rates we do not approve of it. It does not pay to run any chances whatever in taking out insurance. Experience shows that it pays to patronize a company that everybody admits is first-class, even if the rates are slightly higher than those asked by other companies that people are not so sure about.

Such a company is the Penn Mutual Company of this city, for example. Even its fiercest competitors admit that it is absolutely unimpeachable in every way. The writer has several policies with it and knows the rates to be as low or lower than those obtainable from any other insurance company in business of equal reliability. We do not see very much in the argument that Western insurance companies can make better rates because money invested in the West brings more money than money invested in the East. The rate on farm mortgage is higher in the West than in the East and in some Western States the legal rate of interest is higher, but undoubtedly the insurance companies of the East can send their money West for investment if they like, so that the argument does not appear to have very much in it.

Whether the best life insurance to take is straight life, payable at death, or endowment insurance, payable at the end of ten or twenty years, depends upon the purpose for which you want it. A man who wishes insurance only for the protection of his family should take ight life insurance. If he wishes s an investment upon which he may lize himself before his death, he uld take endowment insurance. The es of straight life insurance are very ch lower than the rates on endowt.

We would not prefer life insurance accident insurance, or accident to life urance; neither takes the place of other. A man to be properly proted should have both. But if he can take both, then we believe he should e the life insurance.

esn't Like the Discussion on Selling Advertised Goods.

Seattle, Wash., March 2, 1914.

the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In the February 9th edin you say the "concensus of opinion s that a retailer should not throw out stock an unprofitable article if it was tionally advertised." We can have patience with this sort of reasoning. justice to himself, why should a reler inflict a hardship upon himself st because a manufacturer provides ly a fund with which to advertise tionally, and who does not make an equate provision to insure the retailer ne distributor) a return for his inluable services, without which he, the nufacturer, would find pretty hard dding?

When we are asked, "How many unofitable Nationally advertised goods n a grocer afford to handle?"— to our nd there is only one answer—none. ith us the question is not debatable. One ght just as well ask the "Modern Merant and Grocery World," "How many profitable advertisements can you afrd to contract for and run?" A Brief Story of a Successful Pittsburg Grocery Firm.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 9, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—A few words in regards to your valuable paper. While I am not a subscriber myself, the firm I am with, Huey & Mathews, Inc., Pittsburg, Pa., has a copy delivered at each of their stores for the enlightenment of all their employees. I feel they must think it pays to keep their clerks posted and up to date in the grocery business. Our firm, Huey & Mathews, has been engaged in the grocery business only seven years, starting with one store, in which I worked. Now they have five and are about to open some more. They have kept abreast with the times in advertising and, in fact, in everything. They have the complete co-operation of every clerk in their employment, for the simple reason that they treat their help squarely. When a man proves himself to be a salesman he is not held back. On the contrary he is pushed and helped along. This and their square dealing with the public has gained them a reputation that any firm might be justly proud of. Yonurs truly, Insurance Stock as an Investment.

Sharon, Pa., March 5, 1914.
To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—The Standard Insurance Co. of America offer those taking out insurance in their company an option on so many shares of the capital stock of the company for a period after the policy has been written Would you kindly advise what you consider this proposition for a small investment? Is it safe? I believe there are others who would be interested in this matter as well as myself. Yours truly,

A SUBSCRIBER.

There appear to be two Standard Insurance Cos. of America. One is in Camden, N. J., and is in a receiver's hands. It is going out of business. The other is in Pittsburg, Pa., and so far as we can learn, has a good reputation. We do not advise buying its stock as an investment, however. You could not possibly keep any track of it, but would merely be a small minority stockholder who "held some stock" in the company, but never went to the meetings or knew what was going on. Such investments can be safe enough, and sometimes turn out well, but more often they do not. Generally speaking, no man should invest money in something whose control he has no more to do with than a stranger.

Another thing, insurance is a more or less precarious business, particularly for the small concerns whom the average person never heard of. The frequent exposures in the past have put it to a certain extent under a cloud. It is under the operation of very stringent laws, which is to the advantage of the policyholder, but not so much to the advantage of an investor. Better invest your money nearer home.

So far as we know, co-operative delivery is not in operation anywhere in Pennsylvania. It is mostly in the West. You can get a lot of information on the subject from John A. Green, secretary National Retail Grocers' Association, Cleveland, Ohio.

More than this, we do not keep extra copies of the paper that far back. If you can give us anything like the exact date, we will advertise for a copy.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

IX.—Good Blends of Moderate Priced Coffee.

By WILLIAM B. HARRIS.

When fixing upon the various brands of coffee that he is to put out, the grocer often wonders which coffees he should use to give the best results, and whether it would be better for him to pack straight coffees or to decide upon blends.

These questions are to a greater or lesser extent regulated by price. The cheapest brands will consist of either a Rio or a Santos, according to the section of the country in which they are to be sold. Rio, however, is losing its favor with the American people so that we can safely consider Santos as a rule for the lowest priced sellers.

For the cheapest blends, it will be necessary to use various combinations of Maracaibo and Santos or at a slightly higher figure Maracaibo and Old Crop Santos.

Next to be considered is the group of the most useful coffee in the entire list. Those grown in Colombia, known as Bogota, Mexico and Guatemala. Very few grocers will care to carry all three of these growths in addition to Santos grades, but they cannot afford to be without Bogota. Taking a good full-bodied Bogota as a basis, numerous blends can be made up in combination with Santos or Bourbon Santos and besides this combinations containing Mexican or Guatemala coffee if they are desired.

These types of mild coffees are often used straight, but it is much easier for some competitor to secure the same thing than where a blend is packed under a brand name. For the same reason it is a very good plan to secure a small quantity of either an acid Mexican or a spicy Guatemala. They give character to any blend when properly selected and roasted and will not be found in the average brands of roasted coffees shipped to the retail dealer.

The effort of the merchant who roasts his own coffee should be to have attractive brands and blends that will hold his trade because they are not supplied elsewhere in his neighborhood. It is with this group of coffees that h can obtain these results.

In the past it is conceded that the best coffees came from the Dutch East Indies and from Arabia. The Dutch Government made a practice of storing coffees for a number of years before offering it for sale, and in consequence these coffees had a character that made them desired the world over.

So strong was the hold that the names Java and Mocha had on the average housewife that prior to the enactment of the Food and Drugs Act very nearly every brand of coffee in the market was sold as Java and Mocha. Even to-day buyers insist upon ordering Java and Mocha from the stores that never buy a bean of either of those coffees.

Where the price can be obtained, it is desirable to carry a small quantity of Java and Mocha that can be sold as such and their genuineness guaranteed.

HOLESALE GROCERS OF PENNSYLVANIA, NEW JERSEY AND DELAWARE, HOLD STIRRING CONVENTION AT PHILADELPHIA

ckmann said: "Pennsylvania wholeale grocers enjoy the distinction of ning more members than any other ate. You have not only contributed erally to membership, but in talent d ability. The National Wholesale rocers' Association of the United ates obtains more good things, more owledge and has better support from ennsylvania members in official capacies and from chairmen of different mmittees than any other State we ve within our association. It has alays been my pleasure to attend your eetings. I was present at its birth d have been at every birthday since. was my privilege to have recomended your most amiable and capable cretary, Mr. Graves, of whom you are l proud.

"I will touch upon the question of urchase Discount Committee, which our president has also mentioned. ou have no doubt noticed that the urchase Discount Committee has been ble to obtain discounts for cash for ou from manufacturers, which it is our duty to respect, both in spirit and letter. I have taken the liberty of ending out a letter on this subject. There have been criticisms as to the nor of that letter. Several authorities have said they consider the subject ntirely proper. If you gentlemen ould only realize that you are assisting your Purchase Discount Committee in respecting those arrangements hich they are making for you."

A rising salute given Secretary raves as he arose to make his annual eport, which was as follows:—

The hardest and most unfair competition to-day is from the man who does not know what he is doing or why he is doing it. Fair competition is where every man knows just what he is doing and how he is doing it. No higher honor can be paid to any man than to say he has the respect of his competitors. A marked illustration of the improved conditions in the territory of your association is that shown since contracts and restricted prices have been withdrawn from many articles. From personal observation and from what we can learn, we believe that prices have been well maintained and that there has been less unfair competition than when restricted prices were in force. A condition like this would not have been possible five years ago.

We have not, however, found the panacea for all of your ills and troubles; but the association has been of great value in the past, and there is, we believe, still more need for united efforts now possible in the future.

If we should ask what is the greatest need of the association today, there might be a variety of answers; but all of us, with perhaps few exceptions, must agree that some new form of constructive work is most needed at the present time. What shall it be? We have a strong and efficient organization, with 96 per cent. membership who are loyal and true. We have, with considerable success, preached the doctrine of the association as laid down in its constitution, and

"READYMAID" PROFITS

THE SOUPS IT PAYS TO SELL!

Readymaid Concentrated Soups will please your customers because of their natural flavor; they are made of strictly fresh, clean meats and vegetables, in our spotlessly clean kitchen, and contain only the natural ingredients used in making soups in the home. To understand this, try Readymaid Tomato Soup and see if it doesn't have a better tomato flavor than any other you ever tasted. Notice its rich, real tomato color. It is Tomato Soup. All Readymaid Soups have that natural taste, and that's why they're so easy to sell.

Ready=made Profit for You

"Well bought is half sold"—you make a profit on Readymaid Concentrated Soups as soon as you buy them because you can buy them for less than others. The price for all kinds is 90 cents per dozen, and on a five-case purchase we give you 10 per cent., FREE, which lowers the cost to 81 cents per dozen. We give you this low price so you will push the sale of Readymaid Soups, instead of charging you more and spending the extra money in advertising.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"READYMAID CONCENTRATED SOUPS have the natural flavor of home-made soups because they are absolutely pure. Try a few cans this week."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants have in the last two or three years been doing some successful constructive work in educating our people for higher business ideals and better business methods. Again we ask, what shall it be? In our humble opinion, this day needs a closer relationship with the retailer, more thought and planning on our part to make him a better distributor and a safe risk. We sometimes read in trade papers of failures in the retail grocery business being so numerous they cannot be counted, while those still in business, having failed but don't know it, are counted by the thousands. If these reports are true, it is high time the jobbers gave the matter some sober thought. Right here might be done some practical constructive work worthy of our best efforts in educating the retailer for better business methods. The success of the retail grocer is your success, because your success in business depends largely if not wholly upon the success of the retailer. How shall this work of teaching our customer efficiency and better methods in business be done? We believe this body of practical business men, when they appreciate the necessity of it, will soon find a way—possibly an expert to do introductive work, to be followed by jobbers' salesmen and specialty men doing missionary work along definite lines might find favor as a working plan. This is constructive work, and cannot be done in a day, but let us get at it and keep at it and the harder we work at it the more permanent will be the result.

Our membership is practically the same as last year because, as stated in our last report, its increase is now almost entirely dependent on new firms going into business. We have three prospects we hope to line up at this meeting; and if not, there will be work ready at hand for the new Membership Committee.

Our office, it seems to your secretary, has been more active this last year than ever before. The work grows. We have sent out 8,897 letters and notices. We have traveled 10,856 miles, all in the interest of association work. Members are coming in closer touch with the association and are using its facilities more and more to help adjust their difficulties. We have received during the year many calls from manufacturers and others interested in our work. This is giving ourselves "the hand," but it shows the importance of your association.

Our finances are in good shape, as the detailed statement of your worthy treasurer will show. We are pleased to report that members responded to the new scale of dues adopted at the Wilmington convention, without, as far as we know, a single exception, which indicates that they look upon this association as an important business asset.

Three meetings of the Executive Committee have been held during the year to consider legislation and other important matters pertaining to the best interest of the association. Permit me to again remind you of the debt of gratitude you owe to the members of the Board for their splendid service in directing wisely the affairs of your association, and to Mr. Kurtz a vote of thanks for his earnest efforts in your behalf during his first year as president, which he has filled with credit to himself and with honor to the association.

During the year we have held five meetings of the Philadelphia and Camden jobbers; one meeting each, at Reading with 24 present, at Wilkes-Barre with 17 present, at Scranton with 14 present, at Erie with only 5 present, due to too short notice, and at Altoona with 30 present. At these meetings the jobbers informally discussed such questions as credits, discounts, prepayment of freight, and matters of local interest. We had as visiting jobbers at these meetings, Mr. Robert G. Bursk at Wilkes-Barre, Mr. Arjay Davies at Scranton, and Mr. James Hewitt and Mr. George Lippincott at Altoona, who assisted in making the meetings helpful and interesting. The advantages of these zone meetings are recognized and by many highly appreciated. Here members get close together and do team work for their protection and mutual welfare. It promotes a friendly feeling, and above all, creates confidence in one another. That this important work may be put upon a more permanent basis, and have a standing before this body, we suggest the appointment of a committee at this session to map out the whole territory into districts or zones and report tomorrow morning their recommendations, and also that the president appoint yearly a committee of three from each zone, whose duty shall be to arrange a time, a place, and a programme for at least one meeting a year, and to co-operate with the secretary and general manager in promoting the best interest of the association in their respective districts. We believe this plan would carry the influence of the convention throughout the entire year. If this suggestion meets with your approval a resolution covering the desired purpose should be passed, and the Pittsburg jobbers should be invited to join us in this important work.

One of the most interesting and helpful things the association has ever done was the discussion and study of the cost of doing business, as taken up four years ago. Believing it would be valuable information to know the average cost of doing business to-day, we sent out to our members and others in the territory, on January 9th, a letter (copy herewith attached) requesting them to furnish us with the cost of doing business for their last business year. Out of 155 requests sent out, we are sorry to report only 51 responded. These we have turned over to Mr. F. B. Reeves, Jr., who will discuss the subject with you to-morrow.

If anyone discounts the National Wholesale Grocers' Association meetings, he has never attended one and does not know. The convention at Atlantic City last May was up to the high water mark in the reports and addresses. If you failed to attend, you missed a good opportunity to get in touch with the big men of your craft from all parts of this great country of ours. We are honored in having with us Mr. Alfred H. Beckmann, the secretary of that great organization. Listen to this advance notice: "It is our purpose to charter a Pullman car and take a large delegation from this section to the Minneapolis convention, June 17-19th. If you wish to join our party you will have to speak early."

We are always glad to receive an invitation from the American Specialty Manufacturers Association. Their meeting in Buffalo, November 20, 1913, was in many respects the best they ever held. They recognize the jobber as the proper and most economical channel for the distribution of their products to the retailer, and many of the members carry it out absolutely. We are pleased to welcome Mr. Louis Runkel, their president, who is a good man to know, especially if you are interested in food legislation.

Just here we wish to congratulate the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives on the good they are doing, and we take this opportunity to again express our appreciation of the co-operation they are giving the jobbers, and for the courtesy extended to the members of this association at their annual dinner in December. The relationship between their association and the jobbers is on the most friendly basis, because the spirit of their membership is to play fair. Their association has done good work towards eliminating fictitious orders. Now, we believe their influence can be extended to taking care of the jobbers on "bona fide" orders which are positively rejected by the retailer. In cases of this kind, and there are a few, it should not be up to the jobber, or even the manufacturer, to force the retailer to take the goods; for either to do so would invite the retailer's ill will against the jobber and against the manufacturer's product.

It was with great pleasure and profit that we again attended the New York State convention held at Utica, January 22d. We are beginning to feel very much at home with them, and glad to see a number of their members with us today, among them their new president, Mr. E. C. Stewart. While there were some excellent papers read at their convention, we direct special attention to the one by Mr. A. D. Moore on "Cash Discount," in which he called upon the association to present a solid front to the "discount thief," the man who expects and demands his discount long after the prescribed ten days. We understand it has been printed, and no doubt their secretary, Mr. Gray, would be pleased to send you a copy on request.

You have had two issues of the "Exchange List." So as to give you a practical illustration of what it is and its purpose, we started it in advance of this meeting. What do you think of it? Is it worth while? This is a question for you to decide here at this meeting. If it appeals to you as a good business proposition, we recommend that a resolution be passed adopting the plan, and that a committee of three be appointed to advise with and assist your secretary in developing and perfecting it so as to serve our people best.

Only one of our members has passed away this year, namely, Mr. Stine, who died at his home in Chambersburg. It is with a deep sense of sorrow that we here record the death of Arthur M. Wilson, of Hartford, Conn. A great wave of sorrow and loneliness came over me when I received a telegram announcing his death. He was, to his closest friends, a man of loving heart and the most social companionship. He was an enthusiastic association worker, and none with more influence and friends than he. We shall all miss him.

Permit me before closing this report to express my personal appreciation for your uniform kindness and courtesy during the year, especially is this true regarding your president, Mr. Kurtz, and Mr. Schwarz, who have been untiring and self-sacrificing in their efforts to serve your best interest.

It was announced that Louis Runkel, who was on the programme to read a paper here, was not present, but would be present on Thursday.

Mr. Arjay Davies, of Easton, h read the report of the Committee Trade Discounts.

The report of Treasurer Chas. Fox then read, showed a balance hand of $604.50.

Mr. Graves asked permission to a few words as to what will be d with his reports. Several things we close to his heart in it which need further action than merely acceptan of report.

Mr. Reeves moved that these thin be referred to the Committee on Re olutions, which was done.

Mr. Bursk moved that Committee Zone meetings be appointed immediate to report next day. The following we appointed: R. G. Bursk, F. B. Reeve Jr., Mr. Kelchner, Harry Stoddard, Wilkes-Barre; C. W. Burtnett, of Ha risburg.

Mr. Bursk called on Mr. W. Leitsc Columbus, Wis., president of the N tional Canners' Association, to addre the meeting. Mr. Leitsch said: "Ther are some things you must impress upo the individual which your associatio cannot do. If you want a more libera discount it is necessary that you insis upon every member conforming to th same terms. If you want a liberal pro tection against swells, most good can ners stand back of goods, regardless o the terms. Don't stand back, but mak a claim for protection.

"Do not spend so much time on ad ditional discounts. Discount is only matter of price. Very little difference are made by different discounts. You want better boxes, labels, quality. Why push down price by increasing dis counts? Give us a chance to give you better quality. Educate your salesmen. They must thoroughly understand what you are offering.

"Great opportunities in canning busi ness caused in congested living in cities, tiny kitchens, etc., all of which create demand on packages ready for use as much as possible.

"Why not put the strength of this association behind this movement and increase your business? Discounts are all right; make them uniform, but don't ask anything unreasonable.

"We used to be taught years ago to mind our own business, but we must not consider that everything not our own personal business does not affect us. We must think of our fellow men. The pure food law is a product of this. We want inspection, frequently and intelligently by intelligent men.

"Don't always work against the Government, but try by working with it to get intelligent, fair legislation and uniform legislation as far as possible.

"I leave with this thought that we want your help to increase our branch of the business, which naturally will increase all your lines. You can do this by study and by educating men you send broadcast over the United States. They can educate retailers, and they in turn the consumer, to whom our goods go."

Mr. J. Grant Schwarz, chairman of the Legislative Committee, delivered the following report:—

In January of last year war was declared between two forces, the ne led by the intrepid general, lon. Jas. Foust, the other by the ntiring general, Alvin M. Graves, bly assisted by his aid-de-camp, Major Fred. R. Drake and Lieuten-nt-Colonel Danahey. To give ames to the opposing forces I am nable, because it was not the pure ood army vs. the "food dopers," s has been erroneously charged gainst the wholesale and retail gro-ers by certain daily newspapers, ndividuals, etc., but who, on the ontrary, are anxious to co-operate ith the Department to bring about he best results. In face of such acts, the only cause for opposi-ion was that it is possible to over-ct legislation of any kind, and to ave laws in this State not in con-ormity with the Federal laws would build a Chinese wall around ur glorious Commonwealth; there-ore General Graves' forces, real-zing such to be the case, declared war. After some interesting skir-nishing in the shape of hearings, he first battle was fought on the loor of the Senate and was won by General Graves and his army. General Foust, undaunted by de-eat, succeeded in having the act Senate Bill No. 5), the cause of he conflict, reconsidered and placed n the postponed calendar. Then ame reconnoitering on both sides o add recruits, with both generals pying and working hard; indeed, am informed that General Graves eard a rumor that the enemy were oing to intrench themselves at or fter 1 A. M. a certain morning to arry their point, and he posted him-elf right on the ground of battle the Senate Chamber) where he lept with one eye open to give no hance for the enemy to slip one ver on him and surprise him on a ertain day. When General Foust's hief of staff by a grand appeal ried to bring over to his side con-erts from General Graves' side, the word was given to open fire, and after the smoke had cleared it was found that victory was again perched upon General Graves' ban-ner and General Foust and his forces most agreeably and amicably surrendered, which ended a great conflict, one which was a strain on all concerned and one in which on our side, Messrs. Graves, Drake and Dahaney, assisted by Messrs. Cal-vert, Kurtz and a few other hard workers, deserve great credit. I, also, cannot let this opportunity pass without most highly commending Hon. Jas. Foust and his assistants for their splendid work; they put up a good fight. I hope we can prev-vail upon the Department to feel we are their friends and that to enact, change or act upon any pure food legislation, they would ask a committee of merchants to meet them at any time and confer on the advisability or inadvisability of such. In your co-operation, remember in your protests that you are not fight-ing the use of pure food laws, but the abuse. Senate Bill No. 11, per-taining to weights and measures, also incurred much work to accom-plish certain necessary exemptions, such as the Federal law provides, which after several conferences with the Chief of the Bureau of Stand-ards, we successfully accomplished, and whilst the law is in effect the Department sees the advisability of awaiting final action as to establish-ing variations and tolerances on cer-tain commodities subject to changes until the Federal Government, which is now experimenting along those lines, reaches as far as possible definite conclusions due to such ex-perimentation.

In concluding, I wish to say that I do most earnestly appeal to all wholesale and retail grocers to be conversant with the act and to make every effort to conform with the same as far as absolute rulings are made, and for our association to work with and educate the retailers as to requirements of acts.

Also, I would like to call a meet-ing of all wholesale grocers who are incorporated to organize and map out a plan of campaign for work during session beginning next Jan-uary to bring about passage of act exempting from paying a mercantile tax, such and all corporations, etc., who are required to pay a tax on capital stock, both taxes of which impose upon such more than a double taxation and is unfair dis-crimination.

You should also acquaint your-selves thoroughly with labor laws now in effect as to hours of labor both for men and women and child labor, safety devices and other re-quirements, instead of waiting until an inspector might catch an unin-tentional offender and prosecute him. You can get a pamphlet such as I have here by applying to Dr. John Price Jackson, Bureau of Labor and Industry, Harrisburg, Pa.

Mr. Mullen, of Delaware, comment-ing on the above, spoke of the great desirability of uniform food laws.

Mr. Reeves, of New Jersey, spoke of legislation regarding food pending in his State. He mentioned three bills of par-ticular interest, all of which he thought they had been able to have cast out. There was a good deal of uproar about Bill No. 123, requiring canned goods to have shown date, etc., and some mis-apprehension regarding Senate Bills Nos. 99 and 100. No. 100 was more or less of a drug act.

Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust was then introduced and spoke as fol-lows:—

Much of the activity in the mod-ern business world is due to the vital force which is added to busi-ness by the wholesalers and job-bers of our country, the so-called middlemen. In these latter days a cry has gone over the country for a reduction of the cost of living, and great criticism has been brought of modern business methods, because of the alleged waste caused by the methods of handling commodities from the producer to the ultimate consumer. Whatever of additional cost there is by reason of the mid-dleman and the system of distri-bution of necessaries of life, this at least is true, that under modern con-ditions of society, the elimination, or attempted elimination, of the middleman is not only impracticable, but if possible would retard the wheels of business, require social re-construction and be a step back-ward in the advancement of the race. If it be true that the hand-ling of, say, food products, from the producer to the jobber or wholesaler, thence to the retailer, and thence to the consumer, adds largely to the cost of food, yet this additional cost has its equivalent, and more than its equivalent, in convenience, in the protection and preservation of the quality of the food and in the protection to the public health thereby. There is no force anywhere in existence that so much and to such an extent operates to secure to the people purity and wholesomeness in the food con-sumed by the public as the whole-salers and jobbers of the United States. There is nowhere a body of men who have aided more in the enforcement of the food laws of the several States and of the nation, than have the wholesalers and job-bers of this country. They have done this by studying the requirements of the food laws and then by insisting and compelling the manufacturers of the country to comply therewith. Most of the infractions of the food laws now are in relation to foods that are either produced locally, and thus pass directly from the producer to the retailers, or else are of the class of foods that pass directly from the manufacturer to the retailer and do not pass through the hands of the wholesaler or jobber.

As an officer having in charge the enforcement of the food laws in the State of Pennsylvania, I have found at all times that the wholesale dealers and jobbers of the country have, almost without exception, sought honestly and in good faith, to uphold and comply with all of the food laws and regulations adopted thereunder. There have been differences between us in reference to the enactment of legislation and as to the form that such legislation should take, but after legislation has once been enacted, there has been shown a commendable disposition on the part of the wholesaler and jobber to aid in the enforcement of the law. Your association has, therefore, been a potent influence in conserving the public health and in the bringing about of honest dealing as to the commodities which your members handle.

Commissioner Foust also condemned the recent bleached flour decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, on the ground that requiring food officials to prove that the particular quantity of a foreign ingredient used was harmful, placed too heavy a burden on them and largely defeated the purpose of the law.

Visiting manufacturers and manufacturers' representatives were then introduced.

Mr. Andrew Ross, of the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co., stated that as he has been questioned as to the status of the Government suit against his company, he would take the opportunity to say that the Government has postponed the case again and again. He asked the jobbers present to hold to uniform prices, regardless of the effect of the suit.

H. G. Flint, president of the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives and local representative of the Shredded Wheat Co., brought greetings from the 140 members of his association and extended welcome and invitation to the smoker that evening. He also asked for more co-operation from the jobbers and said there was room for improvement in specialty orders. "We have a new plan, which also establishes quality of orders, of considerable interest to you all, and will shortly present it."

Albert M. Warren, Philadelphia agent of the Quaker Oats Co., spoke briefly, conveying the good wishes of his company.

W. H. McCormick, president of McCormick & Co., Baltimore, Md., discussed the hodge podge of legislation which is constantly being proposed in the various legislatures. He spoke especially of varied drug acts which prevent the sale in some States of certain drugs by retail merchants, while other States allowed them to be sold, all because of a slight difference in the various State laws' definitions of a "drug."

Mr. McCormick asked for the association's co-operation to secure uniformity of laws wherever possible.

The association then adjourned. In the evening members were the guests of the Philadelphia jobbers at Keith's Theatre, and after this the Philadelphia Association of Manufacturers' Representatives gave a smoker at the Hotel Adelphia.

Thursday morning's session was executive, only members being admitted. There were several addresses and much discussion. One of the principal addresses was by D. C. Shaw, the Pittsburg jobber, on "A Study of Insurance, its Character and Cost; also if Your Customer is Properly Protected." This address is here presented:—

The title is well chosen, for it is indeed a study. I am not going to go into the discussion very deeply. I am not an insurance expert. I do not claim to be more than an humble layman seeking to "stop fire." We all feel that rates of insurance are too high. I suggest the first remedy is to reduce the fire loss. I know of several old line insurance companies that have made no money on their underwriting; others have been obliged to liquidate, and yet others who have cut dividends in half on account of the heavy fire losses of the past few years. I am urged as a remedy to join a Grocers' Reciprocal Insurance Company or a Grocers' Inter-Insurance Company or a Mutual Fire Insurance Company. These suggestions I am not going to discuss. They are good beyond a doubt, and the protection possibly as good as any other form of insurance. I have, however, been raised in another school. I am reminded of a story of Mr. Lincoln, who, after listening to a young theological student preach his first sermon, was approached by the young preacher with the query, "Mr. Lincoln, how did you like my sermon?" "Well," said Lincoln, "any one who likes that kind of a sermon, that is the kind of a sermon they would like."

I have no quarrel with any responsible mutual insurance company, and as to grocers' insurance companies and inter-insurance, that system I understand will be fully explained to us during this convenby a gentleman well versed on the subject.

INSURANCE, ITS CHARACTER AND COST.

I have found in my limited experience the character of insurance varies greatly on account of the kind of risk and the character of the men who direct the affairs of the company, but not any more than the men who solicit the business for the company—and the men who inspect the premises of the assured. Lack of care in insuring risks and careless inspection of risks is largely to blame for the immense fire waste. The moral hazard is another great factor in the heavy fire loss. I claim an applicant for insurance, I care not in what kind of a company, should be as closely inquired into as an applicant for credit, and if not of good moral character he should carry his own insurance; thus he would be relieved of the temptation to burn his own property.

IS YOUR CUSTOMER PROPERLY PROTECTED?

I hold this to be a very important matter. It is as much your duty to know that as to know whether he closes his store properly at night. Many of the people with whom we deal are not familiar with insurance as you and your representatives are, and often look with confidence on your men to keep them posted on such matters. Only by education can we spread the gospel of fire protection and fire prevention.

Now, I have only briefly touched on the subjects you have assigned me, and I am going to tax your patience just a little longer to ask you to consider

THE NATIONAL FIRE WASTE.

Do you know in the past year we, in the United States and Canada, burned up $224,723,350, and during the three years, 1911, 1912, 1913, we lost $684,381,500. These are reliable figures from reliable sources, and I say to you gentlemen of this convention this is a National crime. Laying aside all preferences for the kind of insurance we should take, we should resolve our instant duty to ourselves and those dependent upon us, is that we will make a careful study,

HOW TO PREVENT FIRE.

A paper read by Mr. Warner on "Prevention of Loss by Fire" before the New York wholesale grocers in January should be read by every policyholder in the land. It is full of practical and yet simple suggestions as to how to reduce our fire waste. The germ planted in New England years ago by the organization of a fire prevention association is spreading until now nearly every city has or is forming associations for the prevention of fire. Our fire losses compared with the losses of some European nations ought to make us awaken to our duty.

No argument in the campaign against fire waste of the United States has been more effective than the comparison of the fire losses here and in foreign countries. The fact that the foreign losses have been about one-tenth of those in this country has opened the eyes of the people to the importance of better construction, strictly enforced laws and a sense of individual responsibility for fires.

The difference between America and Europe in this matter was well put by the Hon. Robert Stone, of Topeka, Kan., in a recent address before the business men of that city. He said: "We are a nation of money makers, Europe is a nation of money savers. We are a people of waste, they are a people of thrift. We figure that the most important thing is to make a dollar, they think that it is of equal importance to save one. This is evidenced in our hurried construction of inflammable buildings, and in their slow and solid masonry; in our willingness to pay a high rate of fire insurance, with the attendant risk, and their insistence on a low rate and unceasing care; in our elaborate fixtures for the putting out of fires and their precaution in preventing fires. We regard a fire as a misfortune and sympathize with the man who has had one; they regard fires as a crime and investigate and punish the man who is guilty. Our temperament is also shown by the different view we take of an insurance policy. Here, if our property is insured and we have a fire, we do not count it as a loss; simply that we have transferred the loss to other and different shoulders. There, the insurance is regarded as a tax, which is ultimately borne by every one. Here, we regard insurance as a gamble, and if there is a fire the insurance company has lost the bet. There, it is regarded as a means for reducing the loss to a certainty, and is borne by the William Smedley, State Organizer of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association, also spoke at the executive session on the great need of the jobbers getting closer to the retailers, teaching them better business methods, helping them to guard themselves against the encroachment of all sorts of ulterior competition. He mentioned the different evils that are threatening the retail trade and contended that these could only be avoided by increased efficiency, which increased efficiency could best be cultivated by the jobber and the jobber's salesmen.

Other speakers at the executive sessio nwere A. Lincoln Taylor, president of the Pennsylvania Salesmen's Association; D. H. Crocker, Wilkes-Barre; Arjay Davies, of Easton; F. B. Reeves, Jr., of Philadelphia, and J. T. Bacon, of Philadelphia.

The main session of the convention was on Thursday afternoon, opening with a report by Fred. R. Drake, of Easton, on the progress of the Metric System. This was as follows:—

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association of the United States has been the pioneer as a National trade organization in advocating uniformity in National and State legislation in all matters pertaining to the groeery business and is wielding a great influence for good in its own proper sphere. Those of you who are members of that organization, and all of you should be, are aware that that association is conducting a campaign of education looking to a simplification of our cumbersome weight and measure system now in use in trade in the United States, for as you may know, we are using the pound known as the avoirdupois, the troy and the apothecaries in the English system and in some of our newly acquired territory the metric system.

The National Wholesale Groeers' Association of the United States in their pure food and legislative committee work, have appointed a sub-committee on the international metric system and it is as chairman of that committee that I have been asked to make a report to you here to-day.

The subject was taken up at St. Louis in 1912 by our convention and investigation was made and work done along educational lines with the result that our last convention in Atlantic City strongly reaffirmed its position taken at St. Louis in advocating the international metric system as the best system for eventual use in the United States in harmonizing our weight and measure laws for domestic and foreign commeree.

The Bureau of Standards, Department of Commeree, Washington, D. C., is using its best efforts to bring about uniform laws on the subject of weights and measures. Forty-one States have passed legislation on it; twenty-four of them enacting laws for Statewide inspection and supervision. There is no doubt of the importance of the subject and we urge all merchants to interest and inform themselves on this question of so much moment in our business.

At your convention last year we read a paper setting forth the principles and character of the metric system, and since that time we have been active in our work along educational lines. We delivered an address before the National Conference of Weight and Measure Officials at their banquet in Washington last May and had Dr. S. W. Stratton, Director of the Bureau of Standards, Department of Commeree, address our convention in Atlantic City last June, and we are glad to know he has consented to address the annual convention of the National Retail Grocers' Association this year. Dr. Stratton has kindly consented also to send the remarkable Bureau of Standards exhibit, displayed at the second annual meeting of the Chamber of Commeree of the United States, in February, to Minneapolis at the time of our next convention of the National Wholesale Groeers' Association of the United States.

After Mr. Drake read his paper he asked for the earnest consideration of the importance of a uniform system of weights and measures and a discussion followed, in which Mr. C. Y. Fox and Mr. James Hewitt added their opinions that the system ought to be generally adopted.

Mr. C. S. Brinton, chief of the Philadelphia Federal Food and Drug Laboratory, upon request, talked on the subject, saying that cases had come before him in his Government work which had demonstrated the value of a uniform system of weights and measures. He said that an importer (in ordering olive oil for instance from a foreign country) who asks that the quantity in gallons be labeled on containers very often is the loser because it is difficult for the other side to figure exactly the equivalent system when changing from metric.

Mr. Brinton said that practically all scientific work is done by the metric system and that if it would be adopted by all lines of businesses in the course of two years they would wonder how they ever got along the old way.

W. J. Montgomery, bank president and wholesale grocer, spoke on the new currency act. He said the primary purpose of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913 is to make certain that there will always be an available supply of money in this country to meet unusual banking and business requirements.

The neeessity of a change from the old law was shown by the panic of 1907, at which time a committee was appointed called the "Monetary Commission," who traveled in all countries to examine banking systems. Senator Aldrich's exhaustive report in this connection was referred to for information in framing the new measure.

Mr. Montgomery said that at present every $8 is stretched out and is represented by $100 in bank credits, so that when anything happens and any part of that gold is withdrawn and hoarded, it contracts things and leads to panics. The amount required to be kept in reserve cannot be touched no matter what the stress may be arising from unreasonable fears or war. The old law was like a hospital that holds aside a certain number of rooms for an emergency and then one day a building nearby suddenly collapses. Hundreds of workmen are seriously injured, brought to this hospital until the regular rooms are all filled. The nurse wants to open the reserve rooms, but the doctor says "no, they must be held in reserve for an emergency" and turns the cases away. Or like a country that has a reserve army and then when war is declared refuses to use this force because it must always be held in reserve.

Under the new act the reserve fund required is reduced from 15 to 12 per cent. in country banks, from 25 to 15 per cent. in city banks, and from 25 to 18 per cent. in central banks. It is calculated that this will increase the supply of money very materially.

Considerable missionary work will be required if a broad bank discount is to be brought about international in its character. You will have to educate your customer to a new order of things. In other words, instead of a wholesale groeer going to a bank and borrowing upon a single name he must have a good endorser. For instance, if he purchases 1,000 cases of tomatoes in the country at, say, $1.50, the seller in the country will draw on the purchaser for the amount of that purchase and he will accept the draft. The holder will take it to bank, and should the bank run short during packing season he can have it rediscounted at its reserve bank.

Much depends upon what action the Federal Reserve Board will take as to what kind of paper will be subject to rediscount.

The chief thought Mr. Montgomery wanted brought out by his paper was contained in a phrase of Mr. Joyce, who is president of the Philadelphia Credit Men's Association: "Credit improperly extended is as destructive to commerce as sound credit is constructive. Single name paper as a factor in our country has developed to such an extent that it should be recognized at present and safeguarded by legislation until manufacturers, etc., have time to adjust basis of sales terms. The object of the bill as near as I can tell is to provide cheaper money for the man who is entitled to it and also a higher rate of interest for those who have money on deposit, either subject to check or 30 days' notice."

Mr. Montgomery's paper was not discussed and the next address was by W. C. McConaughey, president West Virginia Wholesale Groeers' Association, on "Should the Manufacturer Fix the Resale Price." It follows:—

I have been requested by your Committee on Arrangements to discuss briefly the question of "The Right of a Manufacturer to Fix Prices on His Product, and Its Effect Upon Retailer and Consumer."

Inasmuch as a large per cent. of the commodities upon which prices have been fixed in the past have been manufactured articles distributed by both wholesale and retail dealers in different lines of business, it cannot be truthfully said that we, as jobbers, are not interested in a final solution of this important question, for the success of every merchant demands that every detail entering into his business affairs shall receive careful study and consideration, to the end tha his financial, moral and social pos tion be not impaired, and that th laws of both State and Nation b faithfully observed. In orde therefore, that we may reach nearly as possible a true conclusio it is important that we elimina from our reasoning our person wishes or prejudices either for against.

Every manufacturer by spendin thousands, and in some cases mi lions, of dollars in advertising an by introductory work through a army of special salesmen, callin upon jobbers, retailers and consum ers, and upon this expenditure money the manufacturer expec and is entitled to reasonable r turns in the increased volume business which he thus tries to cr ate. The money thus spent is much an investment as the mon spent for labor and material whi enter into the construction of h plant or factory. In one case h investment is represented by vis ble property—his factory: and the other an invisible, intangib asset or property represented on by his trade-mark or brand bea ing his guarantee and name, su as "Ivory Soap," "Quaker Oat or "Star Tobacco," each being species of property in the eyes the law and for which he d mands proper protection under t law.

Many Nationally known trad marked articles have been attack upon the ground that the adve tising expense is not justified, a that the consumer should not obliged to pay for it as he undoul edly does in the price of the artic To this answer may be made

First.—Advertising is as old commerce itself; but modern i ventions have wrought gre changes in the methods of doing The printing press; the elect signs; the army of house-to-hou canvassers, accomplish in a sho time that which formerly could r be done in years; and who shall s how much or how little a man m spend to arrest the attention consumers.

Second.—No trade-marked ar cle is an absolute necessity; and there are scores of similar artic in keen competition with it, it and should be left entirely to t taste and choice of the consum which article he will purchase.

Having created a demand for t product, the next problem is to d liver the goods to the consum but to do so himself in the sm quantities called for by the av age consumer in a country of su magnitude as ours is an absol impossibility. He therefore se the most economical channel reaching the consumer that has been found—the wholesale and tail merchant.

Having succeeded in placing commodity in the hands of a la portion of possibly all of the j bers and retailers in the coun he finds a still more serious pr lem to solve. Our manufacture amazed to find out that one m chant in every commun (whether it be a large commu of jobbers or a smaller commun of retail merchants) by appro ating to his own use, by cutting price, the popularity of this tra marked article the fruit of his vertising campaign, can not o actually throttle the sale of commodity, but because he made its handling unprofitable drive all the other merchants that community into fighting it a trying to restrain its sale, just effectively as if an actual combi tion of all the other merchants been formed for that purpose.

Cases have been cited where one tributor in a community has, for ish reasons, used this means to olutely destroy the trade on an ablished brand by selling it at t and thus making it unprofit- e for other merchants to handle and then gradually stop hand- g it himself. In other words, our nufacturer finds that a few men ttered over the country can most iously impair, if not actually de- oy the trade on his brand or de-marked article upon which he spent years of labor and per- os hundreds of thousands of dol- s.

f the offending merchant pur- ns or appropriates illegally for own use one box of Ivory Soap is guilty of petit larceny, and it y be asked why it is not grand ceny to appropriate or injure as ove described the results of an vertising campaign costing many usands.

But it is claimed by the merchant t having bought and paid for the mmodity in question, it is his to pose of in whatsoever way he y elect. That is undoubtedly e of wheat, corn or potatoes, ich are like all other wheat, corn potatoes and have a value in ery market, and concerning ich the producer has no interest er it has passed out of his pos- sion. But is it equally true of oprietary article which is packed a carton or other container, the ality, value and identity of ich is made known and estab- hed by expensive advertising and exclusive trade-mark bearing the arantee and name of the manu- turer, who is directly responsible the consumer, and who not only cognizes that responsibility but luntarily assumes it in the case perishable articles at a heavy pense after it has passed from his nds by having an army of agents nstantly examining the stock in e hands of retail merchants to e that it is not impaired in any ty, and if found impaired he (the anufacturer, not the jobber or re- ler) pays for it and destroys it. e therefore claims that while he s sold the commodity itself, vertheless, so long as it remains the container bearing his trade- ark and guarantee, he has certain operty rights of which he is still ssessed, and which would be rongly in evidence if any mer- ant were to sell the contents and e the container a second time for e purpose of selling a similar oduct.

Now, if the right of the manu- cturer to protect his property id market his commodity by em- oying distributors under a con- act satisfactory to himself is still uestioned, he has the alternative establishing his own warehouses every commercial center, to hich he may sell his product and turn require the manager of such arehouses to resell them at a price xed by himself, as is now done by Messrs. Armour, Swift and other rge packing houses. While this lan if adopted by every individual anufacturer of a trade-marked ar- cle would very materially increase e cost to the consumer, the right o do so and thus maintain a fixed rice has not as yet been ques- ioned. The recent action of the Federal Government against the neat packers charged them with aving formed an agreement or ombination among themselves, tc., but did not question the right of each one to name the price at which his various branch houses ver the country should resell the products of his own manufacture. And the question may therefore be asked: why is it more illegal for manufacturers competing most bit- terly with each other for the custom and patronage of the public to de- liver their products to the consumer at fixed prices through the more economical channel of employing distributors who are already estab- lished on the ground to do the work under a contract satisfactory to both parties, rather than be forced to adopt the much more ex- pensive plan of establishing their own warehouses in each commer- cial center for the same work?

Should a final interpretation of our courts deprive competing man- ufacturers of the power or ability to pay and guarantee distributors such a compensation, the service would not be given and thereby would result a restraint of trade, defeating the purpose of the law, and the merchant, both wholesale and retail, would doubtless seek protection through the very expen- sive method of having all or many of these various commodities packed under his own brand or trade mark in containers of all im- aginable sizes, different in quan- tity, quality and price.

The result of this would seem to be:—

First.—Manufacturers not being responsible to the consumer for the quantity or quality of merchandise packed under private labels, no standard of quality could be main- tained and competition in this par- ticular would be largely destroyed, and the consumer would suffer.

Second.—As the same economy could not and would not be ob- served in packing small quantities under private labels, as is possible in packing vast quantities by com- peting manufacturers of Nationally advertised goods under their own guarantee, this loss of economy in labels, printing, packing and adver- tising must be borne by some one, and the consumer would suffer.

Third.—Every merchant would direct the energies of his selling force in pushing his own private brand, on which there is no compe- tition, but as he and not the man- ufacturer—must bear the expense of his local advertising, as he and not the manufacturer, must be re- sponsible for the loss on perishable goods, self preservation would prompt him to ask, not "how small a profit shall I receive," but "how much must I take to cover this expense and still have a good profit for my work"—and possibly the consumer would suffer.

After this came George A. Landell's paper on "The Jobber as an Economic Factor in the Cost of Living," as fol- lows:—

> It can be said without much fear of contradiction, that hardly a daily paper or magazine, treating of ser- ious subjects, goes through the press these days of educational advance- ment but contains some expression of opinion, more or less rational, bearing on the subject of "The High Cost of Living."
> And almost invariably, in fact, one might say ninety-nine times out of a hundred, the person who so voices his thoughts on the subject holds up exposing to the view and criticism of an unthinking and an inconsiderate public, the fact that commodities of almost every kind are handled by too many agencies, or middlemen, or whatever name he may apply to the various merchants, wholesale and retail, who form a very natural chain of service in the distribution of merchandise, all of whom must reasonably make a liv- ing, before the consumer is reached.

Then the writer propounds an idea, a theory, that meets with the approval of his audience—the public —"Eliminate the middleman—let there be no rehandling or inter- profit—but let the consumer pur- chase direct from the producer."

We all know just how it looks in print, and how it sounds from the platform—and it pleases the popular fancy—what more is to be desired?

But it is a difficult matter to make a woman believe that a bargain is not a bargain. Parenthetically, it is probably equally true that men are sometimes lured from what they know is good merchandising by a "positive snap."

It would therefore seem high time to defend the position of the jobber as an economic factor in the cost of living.

We are all to prone to accept hearsay evidence, and we cannot criticize the average person too se- verely if he accepts the theory of direct distribution which is advanced in display type in either news or advertising columns almost every day—and it is a plausible theory, for, to use a homely illustration, would not any of us on snap judg- ment believe that a farmer coming to our door in his own wagon from his own farm could sell us eggs and butter for less money than could a retail grocer, who has to make a profit—who in turn has to pay a commission man's profit—and he receives the butter and eggs via freight or express, and the railroads and express companies must make a profit (though that does not seem to warrant any consideration now- adays).

I say snap judgment, for on giv- ing a little sober thought and inves- tigation to the matter we arrive at two conclusions: first, that in many cases the "farmer" replenishes his

MILLER & ENGLAND CO.

Manufacturers and Designers of STORE FIXTURES

1124-26-28-30-32 Washington Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants stock at some local commission man's store.

Secondly, that while we may sometimes get slightly fresher products, we will almost invariably pay more to the farmer for them than we would if purchasing the same article at the corner grocery store. And why? It is simply a matter of economics—the farmer's time is worth something—the up-keep of his team is considerable—and he handles only one line of merchandise, and probably a very limited quantity of that, and must therefore make a greater profit on the individual sale to assure a living wage.

This one simple illustration of an everyday occurrence brands as false the claims for economy in direct distribution from producer to consumer. And the same process of reasoning obtains in the distribution of any line of merchandise—there must be some intermediate agents, be they jobbers, branch houses, commission men, brokers, or what not, a producer cannot sell his product absolutely direct to the consumer advantageously—and by this I mean that the consumer cannot buy the commodity for less money unless the producer is content with less profit.

Another illustration. A certain firm in New England uses clever, persuasive advertising methods to promote the sale of their products. We are led to believe, by their circulars, that by purchasing our codfish, mackerel and other sea food from them that we are buying from the source of supply at infinitely lower prices than we would pay for goods of the same quality at our neighborhood retail merchant. As a matter of fact, I know that this firm buys large quantities of fish on the open market—usually of the best quality, I admit, and pays higher prices for it, one of the dealers who sells them has told me, than he could hope to obtain from anyone else.

Upon analyzing their selling prices I decided that any small retailer would be delighted to sell codfish or mackerel or herring, of a similar quality, to his customers at a lower figure and be well pleased with the profit he would make. And yet the price which the small retailer placed on his fish has to carry the profits of at least two "middlemen."

This New England firm, after but a few years' existence, has recently built a concrete warehouse costing approximately $50,000—I say, on the credulity of the public. Surely the elimination of the jobber and retailer in this case is not an economy—at least in so far as the publis is concerned.

And so illustrations could be cited including various lines of mercantile enterprise. After consulting with persons I consider sufficiently advised on the subject to be capable authorities, my belief has been confirmed that shoes, confectionery and other commodities cannot be purchased to economic advantage in stores operated by manufacturers to distribute their products exclusively to the consumer.

Of these various intermediaries sometimes set aside we are most vitally interested in the jobber. You and I know he is a necessary factor in distributing groceries, and we likewise know he is the most economical agent the manufacturer can employ to market the merchandise he produces.

I say we know these facts to be true, but confirmation of facts is always interesting, and should be convincing. For instance: The millers of one of the most extensively advertised brands of flour sell their product in this market direct to the retailer—they have been doing this for a couple of years, and during that time jobbing grocers handling other popular brands of flour have had the option of either being satisfied with the margin of profit they formerly made on flour sales, and thereby underselling the flour sold direct to the retailers, or by getting under the "umbrella" held over their heads by this independent firm of millers, have enjoyed larger profits on flour than ever before.

For that milling firm finds that their sales organization, their clerk hire, their delivery equipment and their credit department are such an expense that to keep their heads above water requires a much greater margin of profit than the jobbing grocer formerly exacted from the retail grocer.

Yes, and another flour milling corporation tried the same method of distribution, and in about one year's time they threw up their hands and pleaded with the jobber to take their goods on again and market their flour for them. Pretty concrete examples these, think.

Do you suppose the sugar refiners could get aside the services rendered them by the jobber and distribute their products direct to the retailer so advantageously that the consumer could buy his sugar for less money than he does now? No! emphatically, no!

You realize that fact, so does the refiner, and if the retailer gives it a little thought he would say "no" just as positively.

But why ask you this question? You can give but one answer, not only in regards the distribution of sugar, but any other commodity you handle.

I have written to over twenty representative manufacturers of food (or kindred) products asking their opinion as to the economic value of the jobber.

In selecting the manufacturers to whom I should write I picked out some whose well-known policy is to consider the jober an unnecessary distributive medium, for I felt that their opinions would be just as important and interesting, even though they conflict with our conception of good business methods, for adverse criticism or diverse opinions encourage discussion and argument—and therein lies the value of this paper, I hope.

Though it is mighty pleasing to hear such favorable comment as is contained in the following letters, I trust we will profit by the suggestions and criticisms expressed in some.

In quoting from the various answers I received I will omit the formal openings, and perhaps some matter that seems irrelevant to the subject.

Fels & Co. say: "We believe that under the present conditions, with the largest number of articles required by the public that the jobbing grocer is a necessity and not an 'unnecessary factor.' This is our candid belief, and we are sorry that we cannot at the present time enlarge on the subject so as to make it more interesting."

Walter Baker & Co. say: "While I have always refused to write for publication in business matters, I do not hesitate to place myself on record as being strongly of the opinion that the wholesalc grocer is a very necessary factor in the line of distribution between the manufacutrer and the consumer; however, the wholesaler must be a merchant, and not simply a distributor, in order that the best results may be obtained.

"It does not seem posible to me, owing to the immense territory of our country, how any manufacturer of a food product can successfully distribute an article which has a National sale at as economical a cost as it can be done through the legitimate lines of trade, namely, the wholesale and retail grocer. (Signed) H. C. Gallagher."

Jos. Campbell Co. say: "The articles marked in the "Optimist" explain our thoughts on the subject from a viewpoint of the manufacturer who accepts the jobbers as his distributors."

The articles referred to read as follows:—

"There has been * * * too much ill considered talk about 'doing away with the jobber.'

"The phrase has so plausible, so mouth filling a sound and has been so jauntily bandied about that there is small wonder that many wholesalers have the impression that advertising is inimical to their prosperity. That impression is wrong. More than that, it is the opposite of the truth. Only two things can ever eliminate the wholesaler—a natural evolution of business—the wholesaler himself. The jobbers will never be eliminated because of the thousands of retailers who do a credit business and must buy a thousand and one articles in quantities as needed and on credit.

"By the same token, the jobber is a particular necessity to the manufacturer who has a National business. The retailer and manufacturer are obviously necessary to the jobber's business, and the system of distribution of these three is important to the consumer as the most economical means of supplying him with fresh goods as he needs them.

"The cost of getting small quantities from manufacturer to consumer is the same, as through this system less the conveniences and practicability of the former method. There seems to us only one side to the argument.

"We seek perfect distribution."

To quote from the Ox Fibre Brush Co.:—

"We, of course, feel strongly that the jobber is the legitimate distributor of our product and feel that it would be much better if all manufacturers took the same position and played along the same lines. Although we have tried both ways, to a certain extent, we have found that distribution by the jobber is much more satisfactory and economical and will continue our business in this line."

A letter from the Beech-Nut Packing Co. reads:—

"We believe that the jobber is the economical distributor of merchandise when he is filling just that function in the trade. When we say economical we mean not only for the manufacturer, but for the retail dealer as well. Without doubt he will always be economical for the retail dealer, even though most of his effort is placed on his own private label, provided the quality of that private label is fully equal to the standard goods which he is trying to replace.

"We believe that the jobber is economical for the manufacturer just so long as he is distributor of the manufacturer's brands, but when he goes into the private label business, it is doubtful in our minds if or not he is any further use to the manufacturer for anything other than the billing of drop shipments, for the reason that he will never have any enthusiasm in stocking the manufacturer's brands that compete, and without the desire to sell the manufacturer's articles, very little headway, if any, is possible to make, and in most of instances the manufacturer's brands age and they in the end suffer when merchandising their product through the stocks of manufacturing jobbers. The fact is, we have about arriv at the point where we do not c to have a manufacturing jobb stock our goods. We do not u it. If he orders them owing the demand being strong, we filling their orders, but we s them very carefully in reference their ordering anything that have doubt about their moving.

"The writer could argue for long time on this subject in friendly way, but the above are tal points as we see it. Trusti that they may be of some use you, we are, Yours very tru Beech-Nut Packing Co."

A letter bearing the signature W. H. Luden, of Reading, P reads in part as follows:—

"Up to this time there has been any proposition by which t retail dealer could purchase goo at a lower figure, by which the co sumer would receive any advanta for the reason that the orders a very small sold direct to retaile as compared with very large orde that are sold direct to the jobbe The expense of taking and delive ing these small orders is 12 to per cent. more than by selling to jobber. Up to this time there h nothing been offered by which a r tailer could be supplied direct manufacturers. Therefore it is mistaken opinion of many perso that it is possible to do away wi the jobber, or commonly known the middleman. (Signed) W. Luden."

To quote from a reply from T American Preserve Co.:—

"The fact that within the past fi years we have changed our metho of marketing our products from d rect to the retailer to through t jobber is sufficient evidence that w consider the jobber as a necessa factor for the economical distrib tion of merchandise."

Signed by F. D. Bristley, sal manager, the Royal Baking Powd Co., answer as follows:—

"We have your favor of the 17 inst., and we would say that we b lieve that the manufacturers are a most unanimous in their views r garding the jobber as an economic distributor of merchandise.

It is true that there are a nun ber of commodities which are di tributed direct to the retailers, an in some cases direct to the co sumers, without the assistance the jobbers. Whether or not th course is more profitable than t make distribution through th jobbers, we do not know.

Speaking for ourselves, will sa that it has always been our custo to confine our business as closely a possible to the jobbing trade, an we intend to continue along thes lines.

During recent years there ha been a great deal of agitation o the subject of the high cost of liv ing, or, as some have aptly put i 'the cost of high living,' and i many instances the jobbers hav had to bear the brunt of the blam by the so-called economists and the orists who base their conclusions o the theory that if the jobbers wer eliminated the profits accruing t them would be equally distribute among the suffering community etc.

"Little do the people who inclin to such beliefs realize that if th jobber were eliminated it woul only be a short time until the smal retailers would likewise be elimi nated, and the larger retail distrib utors of merchandise would enjo practically a monopoly, which i time would be detrimental to th consuming public.

"It has long been the writer's opinion that the wholesale grocers and next to them the retail gro-rs, are the greatest charitable intutions in the United States.

hen in financial distress, due to :kness, lack of employment, or ıer causes, the consumer usually peals to the retail grocer, who in : kindness of his heart, extends ı credit. Thousands of families
:eive this class of charity annually ɔm the retail grocers. In conıuence, the retailer comes with out-
'etched arms to the jobber, who ewise in the kindness of his heart tends additional credit. Thus it that the jobbers and the retail-
; are the first to feel the effect of y financial depression or panic, d the last to recover. Therefore, is our candid opinion that the ɔber is not only an economical tributor of merchandise, but an :ential factor to the commercial e of this country.
"With the assurance of our high preciation of the services ren-
:ed by the jobbers in the territory

:iation, we beg to remain, Most

Cudahy Packing Co. answered as lows:—
"As far as our own experience in r Old Dutch Cleanser business concerned, we have found the ɔber not a 'necessary evil,' but a endid, reliable, satisfactory meım of distribution.
"We have found him not alone economical medium, but the ly possible medium, and in spite examples to the contrary by ne of our important competitors the same line of business, we ve steadfastly maintained our po-on of distribution through ex-sive wholesale houses, whom we ognize as a distinct class in the de.
A jobber is in business for ɔfit—that is a self-evident fact.
The trouble he has in getting a itimate profit is due, in the main, misunderstanding of the true verning conditions of competi-
n brought about from various ıses and reasons.
The salesman easily drifts to the ıse of competition in price be-ısc it's both the easiest as well the most plausible way of get-g business and offers the read-
: and best argument and excuse.
ıere the jobber has a nice profit, salesman is much too easily in-
:nced to make a concession; l when it is once started it is ıerally only a question of de-
:e and, in time, means demoral-
:ion.
A jobber knows and apprcciates
t his greatest friend is the legitite specialty manufacturer who tects the position of his distribug agent because that distributing nt is the only practical and the st economical means of distribuı he has.
The reason, therefore, is basicly ish; that is, by limiting the price which the general and retail trade secure the given commodity, manufacturer is in a position to ure his jobber a fixed and satistory compensation and thus rit and hold his appreciation and port.
The jobber is glad to see the l product circulate through his siness as he knows that it pays ı well.
If, on the other hand, a jobber ides earnings with the retailer, gradually reduces his earning to h a figure that he not alone
:s not make any money, but, in end, actually makes a sacrifice l he then says to himself: 'I
't afford to handle these goods,
I won't handle them at a loss,' l consequently he turns to some-ıg else which he can substitute and on which he can have a satisfactory income.

"In our business we spend a great deal of time and many thousands of dollars each year in emphasizing our distributing plan on old Dutch Cleanser, which I believe is well understood and generally thoroughly appreciated by the wholesale grocery trade in the United States. Were it to cost us more money and involve a great deal more trouble, we would still feel that it was well worth our while.
"Lack of conclusive understanding of the Sherman law has raised doubts in the minds of many specialty manufacturers. Some of them have thought it to their best interests to release their goods from the so-called limited selling plan. We have consulted the best authorities and secured the most reliable legal advice, so that we feel that our plan is right and legal. It is uniform and equitable to all interests and classes of trade and to the public; so we have stood firmly on our plan and have applied it steadfastly and without fear or favor.
"While we feel that the jobber is the only practical and economical distributor for our product, we at times had to earn his appreciation in spite of himself by refusing to recognize him when he could or would not co-operate with our published regulations and terms. We have thus gained the appreciation and support of the general jobbing trade in this country and have had to make but few sacrifices of possible customers.
"We can say, confidently, that we have always believed in the jobber and that he has proven to us that our belief is well grounded.
"If we were forced (through such laws as have been contemplated and suggested variously of late) to set aside the jobber and supply the retailer direct on an equal basis, it would necessitate an entire revision of our prices and marketing plan, because such a mode of distribution would be tremendously burdensome and the expense and detail almost without limit. And not alone that, but, in fact, we just couldn't establish facilities for reaching the smaller store and the out of the way little country merchant who now has easy and prompt access to our goods on equality with the large retailer in a big city.
"We feel that, on the whole, we have had splendid recognition from the wholesalers in the States in which your association is interested and we have found them generally most considerate, fair and friendly and fully appreciative of our purpose and methods."
Ph. Wunderle wrote me:—
"While our views upon the jobber as a necessary or unnecessary factor may not give you any new material to work on, we can at least say that they are the result of forty years' experience in our line of business, and you can, therefore, accept or decline them on their merits."
"We feel that while the tendency in this day of advanced business development is all toward the lessening of the jobber's field, and while superficial signs would indicate that because of the high cost of living, a determined effort is apparently being made on the part of many large manufacturing concerns to eliminate the jobber, either (a) by establishing their own chains of retail stores; or (b) by distributing their products direct to the retailers, the jobber is bound to remain a necessary factor, because no system has yet been evolved, or is likely to be evolved, that will overcome the principal objections to both of the distribution schemes mentioned above.
"To be specific, it is inconceivable that any large manufacturing concern, no matter how complete and perfect a system of retail stores they may have, could possibly monopolize retail trade to the extent of eliminating all competitive retail stores. Then again, no manufacturer could include a sufficiently complete line of goods of his own manufacture to enable his retail stores to successfully meet competition with the stores who are supplied with many well-established specialties, which are in absolute demand because of extensive advertising on the part of the manufacturers.
"Even though these objections could be overcome, the capacity of a factory of any size is such that many hundred retail stores would be required to use the daily output, and an enormous capital, as well as a tremendous force of employees, working under a most complex system, no matter how perfect it might be, would be required, to such an extent that such a condition is hard to conceive at the present stage of business development.
"To consider the objections to the second method of distribution:—
"(1st) The average manufacturer no matter how complete and efficient a delivery system he might have, could not possibly keep his factory running on purely local patronage, which would necessitate his establishing similar delivery systems in every section of the country, a complicated scheme, which at the present day certainly seems to be absolutely impracticable.
"(2d) Every retail store handles a number of specialties and staples that could not possibly be manufactured by any individual manufacturer or corporation, and, in consequence, the jobber seems to be indispensable to supply all the wants of the average store.
"Therefore, while the larger retailers, by means of co-operative buying and other similar schemes, might cut down the jobber's field and force him to confine himself to a class of smaller stores, his complete elimination seems to be absolutely impossible."
A manufacturer who did not care to have his name disclosed—but who manufactures an article sold extensively to points at least as far west as the Mississippi River points, writes as follows:—
"First, we believe the jobber facilitates the distribution of our product through carrying the stock, and because of this a quicker delivery to the local retail trade is possible. Again, the jobber is valuable to us because we are enabled to make larger shipments at one time, and he in turn makes the smaller shipments to the retail trade, which labor would necessarily devolve upon us if we had to make them direct. The jobber in asuming the credit of the retail grocers makes the losses of the manufacturer much less, and it would be almost impossible for the manufacturer to sell direct to the retail trade without incurring quite large losses, because he is not in a position to know the credit of the retailer as well as the jobber does.
"We believe that the jobing salesmen could be used by the manufacturers in introducing goods if it were not several reasons. He could tel lthe trade the value of the product of first-class manufacturers if he were inclined to do so, but we could hardly expect him to laud the merits of one manufacturer's line over another manufacturer's line which he is also handling, and for this reason we believe that as an educator of the trade he is of very little value to the manufacturer. Of course, we know that in certain instances jobbers do help us and do try to favor our line, but as a general thing we do not think this is done. If the salesman remains fairly neutral we are almost satisfied, but we do strongly object, and we think that it is one of the great evils to-day of the jobbing trade, through substituting one brand for another brand which is ordered, and this is especially true where the jobber himself puts up a private brand and uses it in competition with the brands of manufacturers. This is a great evil and we do not believe that the jobber can be perfectly fair to the manufacturer when he is manufacturing himself. We recall a specific instance which we think will illustrate our point. In a certain Western city we succeeded in selling a large bill of goods to certain institutions, and in order that we might keep faith with the jobbing trade, we sold it through a certain jobber in that city and the jobber, of course, received his usual profit in full. The next time these institutions asked for bids, this same jobber, knowing our price at which the goods were sold, underbid us in competition with his own line and got the business. This is only one of many instances from which we have suffered in common with other manufacturers. We believe that we are on especially good terms with the jobbing trade throughout this country, but we do wish that they might see that they cannot serve the manufacturers of standardized and well-advertised goods faithfully when they enter into competition with him with their private brands."

I am sorry to say that some of these I was most anxious to hear from did not reply to my inquiry; can it be that they are not sufficiently well anchored to their present position of not availing themselves of the jobbers' services to be unable to express themselves frankly and honestly on this subject?

I can refer but briefly to one other phase of this very important subject. "Wreckage always means waste, and financial wreckage is no exception to the rule." Even though a failure be an honest inability to pay indebtedness, many people, associated more or less closely with an industrial misfortune are the losers thereby.

Many a retail grocer has been tided over an emergency by his jobber. "Commercial paternalism," it is called nowadays.

So few of the smaller retail grocers have anyone else to call upon for aid in time of unusual distress—they do not keep a bank account, or if they do the balance they carry there rarely warrants a loan.

Their customers are probably their only other friends—and they are too poor to help financially; and so the jobber often steps into the breach and by good advice, and maybe financial help saves many a poor retail grocer from breaking to pieces.

The jobber thereby proves himself once more an Economic Factor in the Cost of Living.

Mr. C. S. Brinton, chief of the Philadelphia Laboratory of the Department of Agriculture under the Federal Food and Drugs Act, spoke on "The Enforcement of the Federal Food and Drugs Act: Some of the Results." Mr. Brinton cautioned the wholesalers against some practices, among which is the selling of adulterated vinegar sold as pure cider vinegar.

One form of deception is the combining of a certain acid with sugar, producing color resemblance but none in flavor. This is so easily detected that it is now almost entirely abandoned.

Another deception is the adding of water to dried apple refuse and passing this through a generator. There is no objection to this product as long as it is not sold as cider vinegar.

Mr. Brinton cited another case of the adulteration of vinegar and urged the jobber to see that he is protected by the guarantee of the manufacturer under the Food and Drugs Act. If the jobber is careful in this way, keeping invoices which often have the guarantee written thereon, freight bills, etc., he need not fear, when the United States inspector calls on him, to sell samples at regular prices. If any trouble arises and the package is unbroken when bought by the inspector off the jobber, jobber will not be prosecuted but the manufacturer from whom the jobber bought goods will be responsible.

Mr. Brinton explained that United States inspector may be identified by his card, which contains photograph and signature of inspector.

Mr. Brinton advised the jobbers to keep in touch with the notices of judgment which are published in various ways.

Mr. Brinton stated that there are forms of adulterated articles that may be sold by law, but the important thing is that they must not be marked pure. He told of a small lot of Swiss honey that was seized and found to be adulterated and notice was sent to the man to whom it was addressed to appear. The man immediately telephoned the custom house to know the meaning of the notice. When told that the article marked "Swiss honey" which was addressed to him was adulterated, the man told the officer that when stopping at a hotel in Europe he had been served with the honey and had liked it so much that he had ordered some to be sent home to him, and he wanted it whether it was adulterated or not.

The story of this man was believed and as he did not intend to resell it the goods were released to him. We would not have let an importer have this shipment unless he labeled it "glucose and honey."

Mr. James Hewitt spoke on the "Educational Advantages of Trade Meetings," as follows:—

> Surely many who are gathered here were long ago convinced of these advantages, and that is the impelling reason of their presence to-day. But as I look over the years of my business life I can recall the time when the desire for business co-operation was practically non-existent. Each house was a law unto itself. Men in a similar line of business were on speaking terms only. Exchange of views on matters of common interest to the business were rare. The visit to the store of a competitor was unusual. The question immediately arose what underlying motive prompted the visit? Jealousies, rivalries and estrangements were the order of the day. While such feelings are not altogether absent from business circles to-day, the business man is brought more and more to see that his success is wrapped up in the success of others. He is not long in his career to-day before he finds the need of help from those engaged in a similar line of business.
> As in the course of love, the course of business does not always run smoothly, and when these difficulties loom large and appear too hard to surmount, then it is he looks around for some one older or one who has had a wider business experience for help and counsel. This is the great underlying cause why business men in these later years get together. Sometimes the difficulty in the business arises from hindrances outside. A law is proposed having in view the correction of a serious abuse, but in correcting that abuse the law is unfortunately so framed as to work hardship upon transactions that were not intended to be criticized or restrained and which were perfectly right in themselves. An individual protest would amount to little, but the protest of the whole trade commands attention and the law is amended or withdrawn entirely.
> Our Legislation Committees of our organizations could furnish many examples of such proposed acts, and if they had not had the co-operation of their associates in the trade, often their efforts would have failed. So then trouble outside, as well as perplexities inside, are the causes of business men uniting.
>
> Among the doctors, lawyers and professional men we have the clubs, with their annual and monthly meetings to discuss such questions. So among business men we have these great associations that have grown up.
>
> I might say that as in professional life, so in business, there are some houses or firms that stand aloof from their associates and are successful in their career, but I sometimes wonder whether or not they have lost something of the good things in their sphere by their failure to share with their companions the common experiences of their business life.
>
> To speak of the educational advantages of trade meetings I would sum them up under five heads:—
>
> Acquaintance.
> Knowledge.
> Efficiency.
> Respect.
> Honor.
> We must never forget that the underlying motive for co-operation is a selfish one. Selfish, not in its evil sense, but rather because of the desire to better one's own condition; fitting him better to carry on the career which he has chosen.
>
> Acquaintance. At these trade meetings the first thing a man finds out is that his neighbor is as good a man as himself, and often better. The point of view has become changed. Your neighbor is not now loked upon as a dangerous man who spends his energy in pulling down your business or profession, but, like yourself, is humbly trying to gain his living and acquire a competency for his later years.
>
> We find that we have had mistaken views. Misunderstandings of and false constructions placed upon the actions of our neighbors are seen in the clearer light of acquaintance to be an error or judgment on our part. This mingling together in a social and business way, therefore, means much in removing these estrangements and misconceptions. It is an uplift to the man himself simply to know his fellow business men. It is wonderful what contact with our fellow workers accomplishes.
>
> Knowledge. Business acquaintanceship leads to knowledge. First, the knowledge of the men engage in a similar line of pursuit as have just mentioned. But knowledge will grow deeper than me acquaintance. It leads to a mo accurate observation of our ow conditions. Questions of busine conditions, of abuses that ha arisen, of misunderstandings of o purposes by our fellow busine men, questions of business, metho of administration, of the cost doing business, of a fair retu upon an investment, questions the relation between employer a employee, questions concern credit—its abuses and dang questions concerning stock—ove buying and quick turning, the ca of it while in your possessio Questions concerning the sources supply, the real intrinsic value the goods you offer—these becon vitally interesting subjects. Many man goes away from meetin where these questions so interesti to him have been discussed som what ashamed that he had not re ized before their importance or th the knowledge of his own busine after all has been too superfici His one comfort is that he fin upon observation that in these d ficiencies of knowledge he has goodly company, and that all t best things are not ordinarily to found in the same individual. might further speak of the lar ignorance too frequently found the character of the merchand for sale, or why one article is b ter than another, and what this b ter knowledge gained at these me ings means in the better quality goods offered to the public, but will advance to the next step.
> Efficiency. No man surely attend such meetings and ha helped in some way to solve questions before the associati without purposing to put the kno edge gained to effect in his o business.
>
> In other words, the valuable perience he has gained becon part of himself, and in proport as he has absorbed this knowled its effect will be seen to in his o better man.
>
> The clearer views he has obtai will be shown in the better cond of his business. The old questi that bothered him have been brou to the light and discussed, and confronts them with a new cour borne of contact with his fel men. It is not that he will ne cease to learn new things in business, but the putting into pr tice the things he has learned gi him courage to go forward and f new problems that arise. It is the knowledge merely, but it is putting into practice the things have learned that will make us cient and powerful.
> Respect. It is wonderful change that comes over one w he associates with his fellow b ness men. The acquaintances he made, the working out together common problems affecting trade and meeting the master m of your profession certainly the effect of making one m thoughtful as he criticizes. B ness practices once consid "smart" or "sharp" are seen in t true light and abandoned. The tact with the leaders of your fession gives higher views of calling and you begin to feel you are part and parcel of a b ness that demands your best eff not only for the individual suc that may be yours, but becaus the men that are in it and for inspiration that you have rece from your fellow workers.
> And as you come to know t more intimately this respect creases and your attitude tow se who may not be so efficient yourself is to help to build up l not destroy. The hard idea of mpetitor" is lost and that of ther begins to loom large in your id. And so this respect and re- d grows and its effect upon one's n character is seen in the higher als that actuate him.

Honor. One of the great advan- es of co-operation in business is growth of commercial honor. one can be active in association rk and respect who is not clean- ided in his transactions. It is d that corporations have no souls. rmly believe that no body of men gaged in an honorable business meet very long together with- a quickening of interest in each er and the improvement of the siness in which they are engaged. is associating together will have tendency of elevating the ethics the business. We are told in the od Book that men love darkness her than light because their deeds evil. Coming, therefore, into light of your fellow men makes very careful of his speech and ions. The trade or profession dignified, and underhand methods frowned upon. This tendency o becomes reflected in the char- ter of the merchandise offered d service rendered. A man will t be content in taking another's ney unless he feels that he is ing full value in return.

Poor goods—poor service—poor rk, bring no renown.

ft may not be (and often is not) it wealth will follow this co-op- tion of which we are speaking, t in its place is a contented mind an increased respect for your low men—a determination to ke your business honor you and feeling that you yourself have deavored to be a help in this rld and not a hindrance.

In summing up these remarks it ght be well to look at our own sociation and ask ourselves ether or not we have justified r existence.

Surely as I look at this notable sembly there can be but one re- . Your presence here is a tes- nony of the educational effects the sociation has had upon yourselves. ch year has marked an increas- g number in attendance. This eans that you have not only re- ived benefit, but that you have ven something in return, even if has only been your presence and a arty hand shake.

But that is not all—look over the rk of your Legislation Commit- e and see how valuable that has en. It was only by the hardest nd of work that this committee the last meeting of our Pennsyl- nia Legislature, in conjunction th similar bodies, saved us from me quite vicious legislation.

Co-operating with the National holesale Grocers' Association we ve succeeded in obtaining addi- nal cash discounts on our pur- ases of merchandise, which are ore than enough to pay the an- al dues of our association.

Indeed, for activity and progress, ir association leads all similar or- nization in the country. We are oud of our organization, and I pe that we will continue to work ong the lines that have proved so neficial to every member.

We have secured and maintained e cordial support of the various anufacturers of food products. I elieve I am correct in saying that -day our State authorities look pon our association as one that ands ready to assist in develop- g our pure food laws along sane nes.

These are some of the things for hich our association stands, and we have obtained this high position through the hearty co-operation of every member.

At this juncture the chair appointed a committee to discuss gross profits and submit a schedule to the members, F. R. Drake, R. G. Bursk and James Hewitt.

An Auditing Committee, H. G. Peddle and W. T. Kirk, both of Philadelphia, were appointed.

R. G. Bursk submitted the report of the committee on dividing the association's territory into zones and holding meetings in each zone. The substance of the report was as follows:—

"Division of zones can only be done by close consideration and with complete list of members and maps. As the committee did not have this material they suggest that the committee get together later and do this work with proper help."

Action was taken on the secretary's request to know whether or not to continue the "Exchange lists." It was voted to continue this list to be sent out every 30 days in busy seasons. Several jobbers said they had been able to purchase and sell goods through this medium.

In the absence of R. I. Montgomery, Mr. Mullen, of Delaware, read the report of the Committee on Resolutions as follows:—

1.—Recommendation to members to adopt maximum average discount period of 10 days on purchased merchandise. After such period expires all such purchases shall be on a net cash basis.

2.—Recommends the forming of wholesale salesmen's associations in various localities similar to Philadelphia Wholesale Salesmen's Association.

3.—Expresses approval of National Wholesale Grocers' Association in its campaign for the adoption of the metric system and in reference to bulk weight sales.

4.—Asks support for Senate bill No. 152, introduced by T. Burton, for a 1 cent letter postage.

5.—Appreciation for presence and paper of James Foust. Provides that copies of his address shall be printed in pamphlet form and sent out to every member.

6.—Thanks to E. E. Beidleman, of Harrisburg, as a member of the Committee on Sanitation for work in connection with food law legislation.

8.—Regret at death of Arthur M. Wilson, of New England.

10.—Appreciation of James Hewitt and colleagues.

11.—Appreciation of work done by Horace G. Kurtz and A. M. Graves.

William Mullen, of Delaware, as a representative of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, thanked the members 'for co-operation' and 'says the Chamber is most valuable to them because it is active in presenting their needs as business men.

John D. Porter, of Scranton, submitted the report of the Committee on Nominations, first thanking Mr. Kurtz for his services as president and stating that Mr. Kurtz unwillingly consented to be president last year if he should not be asked to serve any longer. The report was as follows:—

F. B. Reeves, Jr., Philadelphia, president; J. G. Porter, Scranton, vice-president; Arjay Davies, Easton, second vice-president; J. H. Blackwell, Trenton, third vice-president; Charles Y. Fox, Philadelphia, treasurer.

This was unanimously adopted.

The only business after this was to decide where to hold the next convention. Mr. Porter invited them to Scranton, and it was voted that make Scranton the place for the next convention.

The convention then adjourned, its work done, except for the banquet that evening. About 350 members and guests were present. After the menu the former president, H. G. Kurtz, acted as toastmaster for the following speakers: Mr. E. C. Stewart, president New York State Wholesale Grocers' Association; Mr. Fred. Mason, vice-president The Shredded Wheat Co., Niagara Falls, N. Y.; William Quay Roselle, Ph. D., D. D., Philadelphia, Pa.; Mr. Thomas A. Daly, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mr. Philip C. Staib, Koenig & Schuster, New York City; Mr. Samuel M. Clement, Jr., counsel, Philadelphia, Pa.

The trade is watching with interest for developments in relation to the two bills now pending in Congress that aim to legalize the principle of fixed prices. The Stevens bill seems to attract the most attention and it is understood that it has the support of many specialty manufacturers and of various commercial organizations.

The bill is described as one designed to prevent discrimination in prices and to provide price publicity for the protection of merchants and the public.

Under the provisions of the bill the vendor desiring to take advantage of it shall file with his trade-mark a schedule setting forth the prices at which the article shall be sold to the wholesale trade and also the prices on resale to the public. These schedules may be modified or changed from time to time by the vendor as he desires. It is provided that there shall then be no discrimination in favor of any buyer by discounts, rebates or allowances. This provision would not, of course, interfere with any of the usual cash discounts or other terms which are general and made a part of the price schedules.

Wholesalers or retailers may, however, sell below the fixed prices in certain exceptional cases, such as if a dealer is retiring from business and wishes to close out his stock, or in case of deterioration in stock; also in case of bankruptcy the stocks may be sold for what they will bring. But in all such cases, the first opportunity to buy the stocks shall be offered to the original vendor at the prices paid to him or at which he sold the stock.

In legalizing the principle of fixed prices the bill throws various restrictions around the proposed privilege. One is that the manufacturer establishing fixed prices shall not have any monopoly of the market for articles belonging to the same general class of merchandise. Also, he shall not be a party to any agreement with other manufacturers of similar articles to uphold prices.

In behalf of the bill, it is urged that it applies only to trade-marked specialties. Staples could not be subjected to fixed prices under such a bill. So, it is argued there will be free competition of the real kind and the manufacturers of specialties would compete with one another as at present, both in prices and in quality, but on terms that will be more fair to all.

The manufacturers who do not desire to avail themselves of the privilege of the proposed law would not be obliged to do so, of course. Those who do not desire to fix their prices would not lose any of their rights to sell as they please.

There are a few who think that the bill does not go far enough in that it does not provide a penalty against dealers who sell articles below the fixed prices. But in behalf of the bill it is pointed out that it legalizes the contracts and so the manufacturers would have all needful means for upholding fixed prices if they desire to do so, just as they formerly did before the courts decided against the validity of such contracts.

A large number of grocers who sell peroxide of hydrogen will be interested, as well as druggists, in a new ruling of the authorities at Washington that after this the labels on bottles containing this product must comply with the insecticide act of 1910. Up to this time it has been sufficient for the labels to meet the requirements of the food and drug law. The insecticide act requires a more exact statement of contents and especially of the inert ingredients.

Various bug poisons and other bactericides are included in the ruling and many of these are also sold in groceries as well as in drug stores.

An interesting incident of chain store methods is presented in Flatbush where two stores of rival chains are competing within a couple of doors of each other. One of these stores is said to be selling so much below the prices of other stores in the same chain that some customers have begun to ask why the company cannot sell just as cheaply in its other stores.

Both companies are strong concerns so no doubt they will be able to stand the cutting of prices in these particular stores for quite some time. Meantime, a part of the population in that part of the city is buying its groceries, especially canned products, at somewhat lower prices than usual. The store that seems ahead thus far in the cutting does not deliver, however, so that fact confines the trade to a particular neighborhood.

Representatives of various tobacco interests went to Washington this week to argue for and against the Underwood and other pending bills aimed against the coupon system. The representatives of the United Cigar Stores Co. opposed these bills while representatives of independent concerns and associations favored the bills.

The question is raised as to whether these bills are constitutional. The general scope of the bills is to prohibit the use of the coupons or to tax them out of existence. Those who oppose the bills claim that Congress has no power to pass legislation of this kind; that any such bills would not be constitutional.

A great amount of statistics in relation to the use of coupons was presented in the course of the arguments.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Conditions in the spot coffee market are unsettled as the result of the break in options. There is little business and sales are put through usually at concessions. The more desirable grades of Santos 4s are generally held up to 11 cents, but some fair supplies are to be had as low as 11 cents. Rio 7s are quoted at 8⅝ cents and it is said that sales are made for ⅛ cent less. Mild grades are dull and heavy.

Teas are quiet and firm. Brokers say that the statistical position of teas is especially strong and that there is no likelihood of any considerable increase from other countries until the new crop begins to arrive. There is said to be an increasing disposition to place orders for Japans in view of the limited supplies. Firmer tendencies are noted in the India Ceylons.

Rice is being bought mostly for actual requirements, but the aggregate of these orders is encouraging to the trade. The prices of Japans seem to be attractive in comparison with domestic rice and an increased movement in Japans is reported. Honduras grades are being offered freely, but it is said that the quality of much of the offerings is not satisfactory, as the Eastern trade is mostly preferring the foreign rice. The tendencies in the South are firmer.

There is a fair grinding demand for spices, but no speculative activity. The demand is chiefly for peppers, cloves and cassias, while nutmegs and gingers are getting less attention.

The country continues to buy sugar only in a hand-to-mouth way in the belief that the 4-cent basis of standard granulated will be reduced. The breaks this week in raw sugar confirmed the attitude of the distributors, as they look at the situation, and they are all the more inclined to put off the making of contracts until there are further developments. Stocks in the interior are said to be light, so that there is a prospect of heavy business as soon as the distributors really begin to make contracts ahead.

Molasses is steady and quiet. The grocery grades are moving fairly well on contracts. New business is light. Ponce molasses will be coming forward freely before long.

Canned tomatoes are strong. No. 3 Maryland tomatoes for buyers' labels are not to be had below 72½ cents, and the supplies at that price are restricted. There is not much of strictly standard, even in packers' labels, to be had at any price below this figure, although there is some selling at 70 cents. The prices are f. o. b. factory. No. 2s are 55 cents at the factory, f. o. b. There is a good demand for cheap peas of desirable grade, but the supply to be had at prices to meet the buyers' views is small. The low prices made by the sellers earlier in the season have moved the bulk of the supplies at 60 to 65 cents, and now there is little to be had below 70 cents, New York. Corn is not active, but is firm. Other lines are quiet, but generally steady.

Canned fruits are selling from hand to mouth, but are firm. The local distributors have apparently no larger supplies than they need and the packers are said to have little to offer, so they are not urging sales.

The spot market in dried California prunes is strong, with an upward tendency. There is special activity in 60s to 80s for delivery out of New York warehouses and orders are coming here even from interior points that usu look to Chicago for supplies. The co reports indicate that the market th is still rising. There is said to larger supplies of 40s and 30s now t of smaller sizes because the relati high prices of the larger supplies sulted in the trade for some time p giving its attention to sizes from to 70s. Spot apricots are active tending upward in price. Holders generally asking 17 cents for fa Santa Clara and 16½ cents for Sou ern fruits. Peaches are quiet, but n soon move in a larger way. There an increasing demand for seeded sins, with prices getting firmer. T quotations are 8½ to 8¾ cents fancy, and 8 to 8¼ for choice in o pound cartons. Loose muscatels scarce and firm. Currants are sell from hand to mouth.

Brokers and jobbers agree that th is increased activity in canned salm Orders are not especially large, but numerous. On the spot the tone is fi with various brands of Red Alas bringing from $1.30 to $1.35 ex sto New York. Spot pink salmon is sell well to chain stores and is firm, though the movement outside of sa to chain stores is slow. Sardines firm, as stocks are at low ebb, but th is not much demand at present.

Flour has declined in the last we It is figured that the prevailing le of prices is 10 cents lower than it w a week ago. Most sales of spring wh flour in jute are at prices ranging fr $4.50 to $4.55. It is said, however, t some sales have been made as low $4.40. Some of the mills continue ask $4.60, but there are no sales that price, it is said. Most of the b ing is in small lots, generally of a c load or two.

Available supplies of butter are la and receivers are trying hard to mo it into consumption. Business is g erally quiet. The feeling is unsett and there are indications of further clines in prices. The prices quoted m be shaded. The fresh creamery ext are quoted at 28 to 29 cents; firsts, to 27½ cents; seconds, 23 to 25½ ce There is increasing pressure to storage creamery, especially the medi and lower grades, which comprise bulk of the supply. The quoted pri on the held creamery range from ½ 1 cent below the corresponding gra of fresh creamery. Process is qu with the best grades selling from 2 to 22½ cents.

The egg market shows increased tivity. Receipts are larger and the mand has also improved. Most of Western and Southern eggs are sell at 29½ to 30 cents, and only a f lots of exceptional grading bring hig prices, up to 31 to 31½ cents. The rivals from the far South and Sou west bring from 28 to 29½ cents. T fancy nearby white eggs have a ra up to 32 to 33 cents for the best l Duck eggs are meeting a fair dema and are in light supply. The range prices is from 34 to 36 cents for Southern duck eggs up to 40 to 41 ce for State and Baltimore eggs.

Canned Goods.

omato market shows no change week, but the market is steady to firm and there are holders who predict advances of 5 cents within say three months. The consumptive demand appears to be good. Corn and peas, both spot and future, are all unchanged and in fair demand. Apples very firm and high, demand moderate. California canned goods show no special demand and unchanged prices. Small Eastern staple canned goods steady to firm in most lines and fairly active.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans show no change for the week, and a fair demand. Marrows range about unchanged—from $3 to $3.25 in a large way; demand fair. California limas are 20 points higher for the week, on account of scarcity; demand good. Green and Scotch peas dull and weak.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for all grades of butter is only moderate and prices have declined 2 cents per pound during the week. The quality of the fresh receipts is fully up to the standard for the season. Stocks in storage are considerably heavier than a year ago, and prices are very dull at a decline of 2 cents per pound.

Eggs.

Fresh laid eggs continue very scarce and the market is firm at an advance of 3 cents per pound. The few eggs now arriving meet with a ready sale. The market is very sensitive at the extreme high prices and as soon as the weather moderates and the roads open the receipts will at once increase and prices sharply decline. The quality of the present receipts is very fancy.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand for cheese continues very light. Stocks are reported very light and the market is firm at present quotations. All grades of skim cheese is more plenty and prices are about unchanged.

Provisions.

All smoked meats are steady at unchanged prices and with a fair consumptive demand. Both pure and compound lard are steady and unchanged and in moderate demand. Barreled pork, canned meats and dried beef are unchanged and quiet.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market is fairly active, with most articles in good demand for both spot and nearby arrivals. There are, however, very few changes in values.

Pepper.—Demand, especially from the grinding trade, is large. Foreign markets are reported distinctly firmer for all grades, and gradual advances are very probable here.

Red peppers in fair demand at practically unchanged prices. Supply is reported unusually short.

Cloves.—Stocks are reported unusually small—entirely inadequate for the consumption to be supplied before arrival of new crop. The tendency therefore is toward much higher prices.

Pimento (Allspice) firmer and in better demand, though prices are unchanged.

Mace.—Better grades are very scarce. The demand is fair and the tendency is towards higher prices.

Nutmegs are firmly held and in small supply. Higher prices are likely.

Cassias.—Saigon quiet and unchanged. Batavia in good demand and scarcer. China grades are in plentiful supply at practically unchanged prices.

Gingers.—Jamaica and Japan grades in fairly active demand. Other grades quiet and unchanged.

Tapiocas in large demand and futures are quoted at higher prices.

Paprikas.—Market has been only fairly active, with no special changes in price.

Seeds, Herbs, Etc.—General jobbing demand good, though there are no changes of importance to note. Caraway is firm, poppy unchanged, celery slightly easier.

Standard Canned Goods.

Nothing out of the ordinary occurred this week in the tomato market in this section, but there was much street gossip concerning this, that or the other thing about to happen shortly that would be of material benefit to some articles, or that might put a crimp in the value of other items in the list, none of which has any basis in fact. Idleness breeds rumors, and the rumor factories are working these days up to 99 per cent. capacity, but the quality of the output is nothing to brag about. The tomato growers and the canners are making no efforts to get together to fix a contract price for the coming season's crop, and the longer they postpone the matter the better it will be for all concerned.

Notwithstanding the continued wintry weather, the buying of spot tomatoes was quite good for the opening week of what is usually one of the dullest months of the year for that article, and the same widely separated markets that have steadily bought them since the first of the year were the chief buyers. The No. 2 size is especially strong, and No. 3 size is gradually working into a stronger position. No one expects an immediate advance in the market prices, but a sufficient advance to cover the first cost and the added expenses of carrying the goods since last season would not be unreasonable. For future delivery there was some additional buying of tomatoes this week and the jobbers are beginning to take more interest in them. The opening prices have started on a fair basis for the jobber.

String beans are somewhat stronger because of light stocks and few holders. Sweet potatoes have shown a tendency toward higher prices for some time, and they will do to buy now. Spinach, baked beans, kraut and corn are moving out in small lots, the same character of buying that has prevailed during the last two months. A few orders for small lots of peas in No. 1 tins cleaned up what was left of them, excepting of one grade. When the spring demand opens up nearly all the canned vegetables here will be sold out.

Orders for No. 10 apples were numerous this week at 35 cents per dozen advance over the price ten days ago, and they are all sold out. Pears of all grades are gradually being cleaned up. Small orders for peaches and pineapples are wearing away the already small stocks of those two articles. There is some buying of blackberries and strawberries in little lots, but the other berries, as well as cherries, are almost at a standstill. The stocks of all of them are so light, however, that they will all go out before the next canning season.

Up to this date there has been no business done in any line of fruits for future delivery.

Raw oysters for canning purposes are scarce and high because of the cold weather during the last three weeks, and an advance in the prices of cove oysters is imminent.

Thos. J. Meehan & Co.
Baltimore, Md.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

The evaporated apple situation is unchanged here. There is very little trading being done in carload lots, but the demand for small quantities for shipment both to Europe and to our domestic markets continues good.

Cold storage prime, in 50-pound boxes, is quotable at 8¼ to 8⅜ cents, with 1913 crop prime held at one-quarter to three-eighths of a cent per pound higher. Choice quality in cold storage is bringing the same price as 1913 crop, or 9¼ to 9½ cents. Strictly fancy grades are held at up to 13 cents, and stocks are very limited.

Raspberries are quiet and quotable at 22½ to 23 cents f. o. b. in barrels.

Sugar.

No further changes of any kind were made during the week, proving that the reduction in the duty had already been practically discounted, the change in price of refined sugars and the reduction in the duty on raw sugars, bringing the margin between raw and refined sugars simply on a more normal and equitable working basis. The margin between raw and refined sugars to-day is figured at 91 points. The average difference last year was figured at 77 points, which was the smallest average margin for many years. This, of course, means that there are periods during the year when the difference is much greater than the average, and especially so after a period of an unusually small difference, such as has existed during the past three months, sometimes being only 40 points.

It is generally believed that 62 points covers the difference in cost of production.

While the present margin figures 91 points, yet refiners at this time are melting raw sugars which cost them above to-day's price, thereby reducing the present apparent large margin. The demand continues fair, but for immediate requirements only. The country have for some time been buying from hand to mouth and with the widening margin between raws and refined, and the easier condition of the raw market, they will no doubt feel more inclined to follow this policy until such time when the demand becomes a little more active, and this cannot be brought about until weather conditions change very materially. The recent storms have interfered very much with the business during the past few weeks, and shipments and deliveries for a short time were practically at a standstill. All freights have also been moving very slowly and refiners have experienced considerable difficulty in obtaining empty railroad cars.

There is nothing in the situation at the present time to warrant ordering ahead of requirements, with the exception of the slow movement of freight.

Rice.

The cheering skies have begotten a further cheerful spirit and an improved inquiry prevails. Stocks in hands of the trade are fairly assorted as to quality and prices hold up strong on high-class parcels though the medium or intermediate command fair attention on account of favorable values. Taking the situation all around, the domestic styles are receiving their due meed of attention in spite of the lower prices on foreign holdings due to the pressure of inferior qualities and the near arrivals of new crop Siam and Java on a lower plane of cost. Japan is without doubt the most favorable offering on the market, the quotations being lower than for several years, thereby making it the best purchase over any other style.

Advices from the South and along the Atlantic coast report unusual slow movement, with indications pointing toward improved conditions. At New Orleans the demand continues active, and therefore dealers are accepting mill offerings at ruling prices.

In the Interior, Southwest Louisiana, Texas and Arkansas, advices are that the farmers are still holding off and that the mills are buying very lightly.

Cables and correspondence from abroad note rough rice market firmer, but higher prices, curtailing operations; spot cleaned, firm; forward Burma, stronger; Siam, steady; Saigon, neglected.

Imported Fish Specialties.

We are pleased to report an excellent trade for Holland herrings during the last week. Stocks of kegs, both mixed and milkers, have been practically exhausted by the exceptionally good demand, and stocks of barrels and half barrels have been very much reduced. Most of the importers have stopped shipments from abroad so as not to overcrowd the market. Consequently, the stocks here are very small, and prices are tending higher.

Also in Scotch herring there has been lively movement, although somewhat at the expense of prices, every one being anxious to sell and clear of stocks as much as possible before the warm weather sets in.

Norway mackerel have been moving better during the last week, and we have to report a good hand-to-mouth demand and normal prices.

The demand for sardines in general continues excellent, and in practically all lines, the supplies are just about sufficient to cover the demand, except in Norway smoked sardines, where the demand exceeds by far the supply. We have been getting quite a number of small shipments from the various packers in Norway, but we were obliged to pay exorbitant prices for the few sardines that we were getting. Nevertheless, we had to get them, because our trade was very anxious to get at least a small supply to cover the demand. Fishing is going on as usual, although in a very poor way; in fact, there is practically no fishing of any consequence, just small parcels of fish being taken, and they are packed and disposed of as quickly as they are packed. Normal conditions are not likely to set in in the smoked sardine trade before the summer fishing begins in May. Quite a number of large orders have been booked at prices which are very much advanced over last year's figures.

There is no fishing of any consequence in Portugal now. Consequently, Portuguese sardines are scarce and very firm. Also sprats have been moving very lively, owing to the scarcity of Norway sardines. The catch both in France and Belgium has been very limited this season.

MARKET NOTES.

All the rhubarb on the market now is from Michigan, and if good is worth 60 cents a bunch. The demand is poor, owing to the cold weather.

Florida peas are scarce and if good bring $4 to $5 per package. The demand takes all the receipts.

New potatoes from Florida are very poor and can hardly compete with Bermudas, which range from $6.50 to $7.50 per barrel; demand fair.

Florida oranges are doing a little better, as the season wanes and receipts fall off. The present range for fancy fruit is $3 to $4 per box; demand good.

Florida grapefruit is cheap—$3 to $3.50. Not much money for the grower in this. The receipts are heavy and the quality good.

Florida beans range at a fairly high price—$3.50 to $4. Receipts are not very heavy.

Florida strawberries are coming regularly along and show good light quality. The range is 30-35 cents; demand small.

Hothouse radishes range from 3 to 3½ cents per bunch. The demand is fair.

California asparagus is coming regularly forward, but not in large lots as yet. The range is 60 cents to $1; demand quiet.

Florida is now shipping lima beans North, but many of them are poor. Good limas are worth $5. There are some poor Havana limas on the market also.

Florida tomatoes, of rather pale pink, favorless quality, range from $3.50 to $4. The percentage of really good tomatoes is small.

Dry Goods and Notions

Muffler Company Opens in Wilmington, Del.

The Way Muffler Co., manufacturers of textile specialties, is a new concern in Wilmington, Del. It will erect a six-story building, at a cost of $200,000, the plans of which are now being prepared. Between 500 to 600 skilled operatives will be employed and the product will be on the market for next winter and spring trade.

The Weather's Effect on Trade and Markets.

Buyers are appearing in the leading Eastern and Western primary markets for late spring and summer stocks, as well as to look over and plan orders for fall goods, now about being opened in all lines. To be sure shipments have been held up by the recent storms, that were reported severe in many parts of the coast, Central and Middle West States. Deliveries for transportation to interior points have consequently been slow, and impatient instructions by wire and telephone to "get behind the goods" and hurry them forward are of common occurrence. The South makes the best reports of road business from merchants outside of the large cities, with the Middle West still a sufferer from storm congestion.

Retail trade has suffered in all Eastern sections in consequence of adverse weather. On some lines prices are stiffening, notably on silks and wool products of all kinds. Cotton specialties, on the other hand, show a tendency to weaken without regard to manufacturing costs. Whether consumption is really falling off is a debatable question, and there is a more general tendency to admit that production is being curtailed in several directions as a consequence of the interference with the distribution of goods already placed on order. This disturbing factor will doubtless be lessened, if not entirely eliminated in the course of the next week or fortnight.

A fair business is reported on cottons in small lots. Staples are in quiet demand, prints are firmer, especially many of the narrow lines. Heavy weaves in novelties and fancies for dress wear are slow for the time being, while the new printed specialties are wanted for quick shipment. More interest is shown in dress goods, with fine French serges in the ascendant. There is a wide demand for crepes for immediate and late delivery. Broadcloths are stronger than last spring's orders for the fall period, with the best season ahead for five years, with the exception of the cheaper grades. Lustrous dress fabrics, on the peau de souris order, made of silk and wool, are selling well. Reports from the experts say that foreign and domestic goods are being analyzed as never before, and that as a result orders are being placed only on fabrics that show the greatest values. Also while the trend seems to be in favor of satin-faced fabrics, cloths that have a pile surface, such as velour de laine and other soft dull-finished goods, are favored by the astute buyers for inland merchants.

Sixteen Hundred and Ninety Beans to the Pound

We have seen the few extra large bean Coffees imported. As a rule they are not much in the cup, but we do want to call your special attention to the biggest bean, good Washed Coffee that it has been our privilege to see for a long time. It is a beautiful roaster and magnificently rich and delicious in the cup. To give you an idea of the berry, would say that it only takes about Sixteen Hundred and Ninety of the raw beans to make a pound. It will pay you to place your order for a bag of this unusual Washed Coffee at 34½c. roasted (or 28½c. green), place it prominently in your store, mark it "The largest bean and best drinking Coffee produced, 50c. a pound," and you will be more than surprised at the quantity you will sell, and aside from this, it will attract trade to your general line of Coffee and help to increase the sale of the grades you are now running at 35c. It is the unusual that attracts and this is an unusual Coffee, so after reading this ad., send us your order.

When you buy good Coffee do not order it roasted on a low shrinkage basis, as such a course is suicidal. The other day we received an order for five bags of good Coffee, with instructions for it to be roasted on a low percentage. It is a grave error to order a good Coffee spoiled in this manner, and isn't it saving at the spigot and letting it out at the bunghole? It surely is, for there is absolutely no use in selecting good green Coffee unless it is to be properly treated in the roasting without regard to shrinkage. Then you will have a good Coffee, and one that will prove satisfactory until used. We have some new experience every day and are always willing to learn, we are quite convinced that the roasting of a Coffee is a very important feature. If you want to see the difference, send your orders our way and they will have prompt and careful attention.

WHAT TO TELL CUSTOMERS

"Here's an unusually fine Coffee of great richness and fragrance. Try it as a special 'treat' and you'll be more than pleased."

This is one of the firms the sale of whose products helps organize the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants are printed and woven crepey effects, and in novelties tinsel printed silks for trimming purposes, novelty ribbons, shadow laces, frillings and ruchings.

A St. Louis correspondent states that in the contributary territory and Southwest, trade conditions are normal and retailers are buying as goods are needed. The attitude of the merchant, while conservative, is indicative of confidence in the approaching season. There seems to be a marked revival in the demand for printed wash fabrics; voiles, crepes and batistes are decidedly in the lead. Imperial and storm serges continue good sellers, also crepe jacquards, crepe broches and crepe crackle in good qualities, as well as plain crepes, for which a steady call has developed. Veils, particularly fancy meshes, are selling strong, and the increasing popularity of ribbons for all classes of trimming continues to grow. This is especially felt in the wider goods and in fancy stripes, plaids and flowered effects, with plain ribbon and moires also in favor.

Sheer materials for dress fabrics are great favorites, such as organdies, pearline lawns, chiffon and swiss, as the season advances. There is also a big demand for staple white goods. Bright colors rule in hosiery, with fifteen or twenty shades offering. Remarkable values can be had in women's and men's artificial (fibre) silk hosiery, and never in any previous season has there been such a large demand from retailers for this class of merchandise.

A Taffeta Revival.

A revival in taffetas is now conceded for the fall season and late spring, and the business in this line of dress goods now looms up big in the primary markets. Taffetas of various kinds, as warp prints, moired and otherwise manipulated, are therefore put down as the proper thing. Faille weaves of various kinds are also being selected as a good choice for fall.

Silk velvets are also mentioned as looming up as favorites by representatives of foreign lines who have been calling on merchants in the West. Chiffon velvets are again being taken, as well as the plain goods. Plushes do not look so promising, excepting in blacks. Novelties are being shown in printed velour chiffons. Brocade effects are dragging, however, retailers being disappointed in the past season's business. Following the preference in silks, the velvet men say that dark shades will be favored for fall.

Crepes in Big Demand at Advances.

A close observer of the market reports that the demand for crepes is of unprecedented proportions during the current spring season. There does not seem to be the slightest easing up in the call. Leading domestic producers are practically sold up for the spring and cannot accept engagements except for very late delivery, consequently there has been no difficulty in obtaining advances ranging from 2½ to 5 cents a yard. In the past decade no dress material has moved so freely and steadily as crepe.

Zibilenes and camel's hair effects are attracting the most attention in cloakings, with chinchillas, astrakans and other pile fabrics also well up as leaders with retailers who watch the tendencies of fashion at first hands or through a reliable trade journal as the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," which is always in close touch with the inner shrines on such important matters.

Fancies in ribbons are now being shown for next fall, and they include the usual number of new effects, with ombres as the latest color development. Faille weaves are strong, in both domestic and foreign lines, with grosgrains still prominent, and Mexican effects being featured. The golds will doubtless be favored in the fall as they have been this spring. A rapidly increasing inquiry is evident for the new satin cire ribbons, or "lacquered ribbons," as they are styled by fashion authorities. These are flowered lengths of glazed ribbons, printed in unusual colorings, emphasized by occasional dashes of black lines, and are used for girdle hat trimmings, pocketbooks, slipper tops and neck fixings.

Approval of the new departments in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" are not lacking. Many are given orally and it is evident the trade's endorsement is hearty and emphatic. The appended is one of many:—

Boots and Shoes

Some Ideas on Selling Shoes.

Practical suggestions from a general merchant, of the modern type, which this journal especially commends, are not always in order, but ever welcome For example, the one in mind handles shoes, with other goods, of course, but apparently he is concentrating on this department because it offers endless opportunities to serve customers satisfactorily, which inevitably leads to increased profits. How manw dealers conduct the "shoe end" of their business in a go-as-you-please fashion; that is to say, they are not insensible to the money making part of the game, but efficiency in management is lacking, and therefore the possibilities of the department are by no means the most promising.

While neglecting no departments in his general store, located in a live Western town, the merchant who is held up as a model, is giving more than ordinary attention to shoes, because he has given this class of merchandise special study. In recounting the methods employed he says: "Advertised brands are given the preference in the stock, for it is found that the only way to build a good shoe trade is on good merchandise that the public knows is good. Then they are pushed, by advertising, window displays made as striking as possible, and we show them to customers coming into the store at every opportunity. You know, the store which shows the goods and which lets people know it is anxious to show them, whether they buy or not, is the store that people like to visit. One of my first essentials in selling shoes, and the most satisfactory at all times, is giving a good fit. We give this particular attention. Besides our iron-clad rule is to sell only shoes of good value and to explain to customers just what they are getting; in addition, we make good on all representations and promises.

"As the larger portion or our trade is among the farmers, who certainly know good shoes and are willing to pay the price without a quibble, we aim to carry merchandise to meet this demand. The farmers frequently ask for advertised brands, giving a preference to such goods, and in buying stock we keep this fact in mind. A lot of $5 shoes are called for by well-to-do farmers, the general run of business men and prosperous mechanics who are familiar with the advertised lines, and therefore it pays to push this class of goods. Our effort is concentrated, as much as possible, on a few lines with an established reputation. Another thing, while the stock is arranged for convenience in handling, good use is made of the advertising helps supplied by the manufacturer—card signs, cut-outs, placards—and the window and interior displays are made to show up to the best advantage."

Knobby Toe Going Out.

The "knobby toe" in men and women's shoes is gradually being retired. As remarked before, shoes of this model never enjoyed much popularity in the East; but west of Pittsburg to the coast they have enjoyed much vogue. They are also greatly favored in the rural sections, and are still in strong demand for this class of trade. The receding toe and flat heel, with invisible eyelets, are the new offerings for men's wear, and running mainly to tan. As one leading manufacturer observed: "Bizarre, extreme or 'overnight' styles, that are constantly flashing up and dying away, to the ultimate loss of the retailer, are no longer good form with reputable concerns."

How a New Shoe Style May Be Born.

Retailers with original ideas—not freaks—are most frequently requested by the manufacturer to submit models for practical wearing shoes, with comfort and ease as the controlling recommendations, for men. Much care and attention is given the details, such as heighth of heels, instep curve, toe conformation, weight of sole, etc. After a sample pair is made up in a size for the designer, the finished shoe is mitted to the "acid test" in the req ments desired, and this somet means an entire remodelling un satisfies the most exacting criti before it is placed on sale. A luck is a good thing for both the merc and the manufacturer.

Dancing Shoes Having Quite a Vo

Highly ornamental shoes for dan in deference to the prevailing te chorean furore, are the latest pro of the manufacturers specializing these goods. It is even said jew makers are now preparing a sui line of ornaments for footwear of most gorgeous description. Anc result of the "tango" and slit sk which fashion now decrees shall higher, it is suggested that shoe tories will be called upon to r women's boots with higher tops reach as far as the calf of the leg. C menting on this new develop "American Shoemaking" philosoph ly remarks in connection with this called "jewelry period" in sh "Should the result of wearing go made with the enlarged slit at the call for this style of footwear, ar looks as if it would, then there be a display of 'tango' effects made will dazzle the eyes of the passe and may cause some wives to buy blinders for their husbands."

For a dealer or an association it would be rank foolishness to express any general dictum on the question, which must be determined by good sense and customary usage."

Hardware

As to Vanadium Steel in Hardware.

The views of a manufacturer regarding the nature and trade status of vanadium, briefly related in the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" of March 2d, are not according to the known facts, and several other manufacturers who use the material for cutting edge products have taken emphatic exceptions to the statement. In short the remarks referred to have aroused indignant denials of alleged reflections on the goods in question of which vanadium is a component and very essential attribute. Instead of "not an ounce of vanadium has been seen in this country for two years," as this journal's informant observed, a scientific authority predicts that "within ten years vanadium will be the most important mining industrty of Colorado," where the supply is said to be practically inexhaustible.

Five to ten pounds of vanadium to the ton greatly increases the toughness and tensile strength and doubles the life of steel, and it is in this form that the processed metal is employed for the saw and lawn mower blades and edge tools of all kinds. In other words vanadium steel is one of the highest and hardest grades known and employed by the manufacturers of these articles. Walter E. Graham, president and general manager of the Philadelphia Lawn Mower Co., on having his attention called to the matter, spoke as follows to a representative of this journal:—

"Whoever gave you that information about vanadium evidently did not know what he was talking about. I would not say this was done maliciously, but ignorantly, to say the least; for if he was at all familiar with the manufacture of cutting tools—lawn mowers, as a concrete example, saws, etc.—he would have known differently. Our firm was the first to put on the market a lawn mower—the forerunner of the existing styles—crude and clumsy as compared to present day models, if you please—under the Passmore patent, now expired, and which we owned. Refinements and improvements have followed, as a matter of course, and three years ago we began using vanadium steel for the blades. Vanadium, in a popular sense, is a cleanser; it removes the impurities in steel, and introduces an element of hardness heretofore unattainable. Only a very small quantity of vanadium is necessary to contribute this much desired quality and it is marvelous what a difference it makes in the life, durability, strength and sharpness of the blades. I may add the cutting edge is held in a remarkable manner.

"In ordinary steel the mower must be repeatedly sharpened, to keep it in cutting condition, and the cost of upkeep, so to say, amounts to something in the course of a season only. I have known one of our mowers that did not require sharpening for an entire year; that, as you know, is going some. Vanadium ore is mined from sandstone beds that out crop in the canons of San Miguel and Montrose Counties, Col. So far, owing to its cost, the use of vanadium is confined to a comparatively few articles, where great durability and hardness is required in steel. Two years ago the price ranged from $3 to $5 a pound; now it is quoted at $2; and metallurgists who have been working on the problem say that the cost of production per pound can be cut to 60 cents or less, when it will be more widely employed."

The appended letter is also interesting in the same connection:—

Frackville, Pa., March 6, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Relative to "Vanadium in Hardware is a Trade Name," in reply would state that I cannot agree with you that the hardware merchant who made this statement is "impartial." We emphasize vanadium steel in our saws, etc., in contradiction to crucible steel, from which other saws are made, and we could no more use vanadium as a trade name than we or anyone else could use crucible steel as a trade name. It is very evident that your "impartial" hardware merchant does not handle vanadium steel saws, Philadelphia Lawn Mower Co.'s lawn mowers, the blades of which are made from vanadium steel, and other tools made from this steel. We have just received a pamphlet from the American Vanadium Co. that we think will bear out what we say, and which we take pleasure in forwarding you. Thanking you for your courtesy to us, and for your kind mention in an earlier issue, we are,

Yours truly,

Henry A. Disston & Sons are also said to be heavy users of vanadium steel in all their products.

Proposed Legislation to Curtail Mail Order Hardware Dealers.

Retailers of hardware seem to be harder hit by the mail-order houses than any other particular line. Possibly this is accounted for by the very nature of the goods—standard lines—established patterns and accepted models—subject to little, if any change year in and year out, the very essence of stability. Dry goods, notions, dress novelties, shoes, etc., are also exploited by the retail catalogue corporations, but in less degree than hardware, hence the dealers in this line are always up in arms against the glittering offers made by these so-called guerillas of the trade. To rail against them in "good set terms" is a privilege the hardware merchant seldom fails to give rein when his particular bailiwick is encroached upon.

However, that is beside the present remarks, which are directed to a movement or a demand on Congress that in view of the tremendous prosperity and amazing dividends of certain mail-order houses their operations shall be "regulated" by law. That is to say, Congress will be petitioned by what is described as "hundreds of thousands of retail merchants" to consider a bill in which provision is made verging closely on an absolute proscription of minimum prices that shall be charged for the merchandise handled. This would amount to the fixing of prices on all sorts of articles in all lines by the Federal government. Partly the basis for this recommendation to Congress is the charge that the retail mail-order houses are guilty of unfair competition. It is the spirit of this demand that enterprises of this character shall not sell a given article at a price lower than that charged by a local merchant.

Could anything more absurd be imagined! A merchant who would listen to such twaddle for a moment is a fit subject for examination by a lunacy commission. Trade organizations influenced by hair-trigger men are inclined to favor such preposterous propositions. Unthinking dealers are also strong supporters of inane legislation of this kind, especially when an unscrupulous lawyer with an eye single to main chance, originates, fosters and courages a movement with this en view. Bills of this description are yond the jurisdiction of any legisla body, National, State or local, an retail hardware merchants are proached by advocates of such tempted foolish enactments, and as for a contribution to the "cause" should understand it is a case of " con," and the Spanish athlete sh be emphatically told so in quick tim Merchants and Manufacturers to Meet This Week.

The regular monthly meeting of the rdware Merchants' and Manufactur-' Association, composed of the aker City's eminent and leading nufacturers and jobbers, will be held their rooms in the Bourse this week.
will be an afternoon session, and tine matters only will receive at-tion. Contrary to the belief of the lers prices are not broached or dissed at these gatherings, which aim develop sociability and exchange ws as to discriminatory freight rates l similar matters.

Charles B. Tryon, president of the ociation, and also chief executive of Edward K. Tryon Co., in a few ef remarks on the meetings said:
Our meeting this week will be de-id of any marked feature, as we had r big affair at the annual meeting l banquet in January at the Bellevue-atford, when Felix Levy, a prominent New York attorney and an authority, delivered his very able and valuable address on the Sherman anti trust law. So pleased were the members and a host of invited guests with the clear exposition of this famous Federal act, that Mr. Levy's paper will be published in permanent form for more general distribution and reference.

"My aim as president of the association," continued Mr. Tryon, "is first to formulate and follow a course to hold the interest of our members more closely, and therefore I shall endeavor to have some recognized authority address them on the live topics of the day, such as business men are thinking and exchanging views about. Our hardware manufacturers and merchants are, as you probably know, very busy men and their affairs require close attention; therefore unless something out of the ordinary is on the programme at their monthly meetings they are inclined to excuse their attendance on the plea of personal business pressure. You cannot blame them at that.

"Then, secondly, it is and should be the main object of every association, no matter what line, in the city, to boost Philadelphia. That is the slogan which ought to arouse our best efforts. at all times, in and out of season. Consequently at our April meeting I have secured the consent of two professors from the University of Pennsylvania to deliver addresses on the 'Distribution of Produce,' a vital question to everybody. The association will therefore take the lead in a matter to which the best minds of the country are giving attention."

The best butter is 38 cents a pound and it's a fine Elgin Creamery.

She hesitates.

Correct Answer.—Our fanciest creamery is 38 cents a pound but we are selling what is known as June butter for 35 cents and a partieularly good process at 33 cents. This process is giving excellent satisfaction and while you are undecided I want you to taste it—if you please.

The coffee we have been getting lately doesn't seem to have any strength to it. What other kinds have you?

You buy our 28-cent blend. We have some for 30, 32, 35 and 38.

Bewildered.

Correct Answer.—That 28-cent coffee you have been using is not what we consider a strong coffee and it isn't surprising that you find fault with it; if you people at home really enjoy what is known as "cup strength." But we have one here at 35 cents that has more body—more of what coffee men eall invigoration, which I feel satisfied is just the grade of coffee you want.

The potatoes you sent me last week were miserable. They were dark looking and we had to peel and peel them to make them fit to eook.

That's too bad but we sold them right and left and have had no complaint.

Correct Answer.—The potatoes you got were imported potatoes. We had only 25 sacks, yet they were recommended as good dry cookers and we advertised them as such and made a leader of them at 45 cents a basket. Since then our buyer got hold of some fine light colored State potatoes (here they are) and you notice while I scrape the skin that they show whiteness—a different potato entirely from the ones you got, and we want you to return whatever you may have left of the dark ones to be replaced with these.

I ordered a head of lettuce yesterday and you ought to see what I got—a little bit of a thing that was just half dead leaves.

Sorry, but we are not getting any head lettuce now.

Correct Answer.—Head lettuce is out of the market temporarily, but let me show you our Boston lettuce that comes in these boxes and which is so tender that we have to deliver it in folding boxes. Just see how easily the leaves separate. It's all eatable and all sound and clean.

PENN STREET
READING, PA.

I have no doubt that this circular got results, and I suppose if that is true it must be considered good advertising. Whether any advertising is good which brings stamps to the front rather than the quality of the goods is a question of policy which is none of my business. I suppose the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. has worked this question out and settled it to its own satisfaction, and it is not my business to quarrel with its decision or even debate it. I don't like this plan of advertising some of the articles appearing on this circular, however. I don't see the slightest direct-pulling value in "Sultana Corn, 8 cents." Isn't there anything that can be said for this corn, beyond the name and the price? You don't even say whether stamps go with them. If there isn't anything special you can say about Sultana corn why not fall back on some time-honored generality like "unusual value"? That is at least a little better than nothing. I believe, however, that there is some better talking point than that about this corn. If there isn't I should advertise something else.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I am writing to ask you if you will give me some advice, as I see by the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" where you give advice to subscribers. I am going to move from my present address to a new store on May 1st and would like you to send me something to be used as an advertisement in the local papers as a notice of my removal.

Hoping to have an early reply and thanking you in advance,

MRS. M. MACMILLAN.

You do not say just exactly what this removal means. It may mean removing immediately across the street, in which case a sign in the window would probably be all the announcement of removal you would require. Or it may mean the entire abandonment of the present neighborhood, and opening a new business in a new and distant neighborhood. In that case you would of course need to do entirely different advertising. I will make a guess that you are merely removing to a new location in the same village, and if the guess is wrong there will be time to correct it before the first of May. If this is what you are doing I should use the fact to base some advertising on, provided there is anything to advertise. You do not tell me this, either. Is your new store larger than your present one? Is it better lighted or more conveniently located? Does it make possible the addition of any new departments? All these are questions which have to be answered before intelligent advertising can be done. I did think I would try to map out something from the slight material you give me, but on second thought I believe it would be more satisfactory to ask you to let me have some added particulars along the lines I have indicated. If you will do this I will be glad to outline such an advertisement as in my judgment is required.

NOTE.—This department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devi of new advertising ideas special occasions, upon req and to the suggesting of orig advertisements when data is plied. All communications in for this Department shoul addressed to the Editor of Sci of Advertising. They will filed in their order and taker in strict rotation.

CCL.—Providing One's Employees With a Safe Place to Work.

The following letter comes to me from a Western paper. It allows me to raise and discuss the whole question of an employer's legal obligation to furnish his employees with a safe place in which to work:

> I want an opinion as to the liability of the grocer under any existing law in the State of Illinois.
>
> A firm composed of two men, adults, own a grocery with a bakery in the basement, located in an Illinois town of about 1,500 population. A baker, adult, about thirty-five years of age, had been in their employ probably a year or more in his capacity as baker, spending all of his employed time in the basement shop, when he contracted what three physicians pronounced tuberculosis of the throat, and is now unable to speak, and with chances against his recovery.
>
> All three of the physicians state that his disease is wholly due to insanitary condition of the shop and will give testimony to that effect.
> Is the firm liable for damages to the baker, or his family, and if so, to what extent?

Although this inquiry is limited to conditions surrounding bakeries, and to the law of Illinois, I can answer and discuss it in a general article going to all sorts of employees in all the States of the Union, because the law of Illinois as to such cases is no different from the law of other States, and the liability of other employers as to providing employees with a safe place to work, is precisely the same as the liability of bakers.

Any employer, who keeps his premises in such an unsanitary condition that an employee contracts a fatal disease in consequence, is liable in damages—unless it can be shown that the danger was open and obvious, and the employee, by continuing to work there, deliberately courted it. If the employee recklessly exposed himself in full knowledge of the danger, he cannot recover damages; the law would hold that he took a chance and lost.

Illinois and the large majority of other States have laws requiring bakeries and other establishments to be kept in a sanitary condition, but those laws neither increase nor reduce the employer's liability. Without any State law, and purely by virtue of the common law, an employing baker or food manufacturer is bound to keep his place in a sanitary condition, and if he fails to do it and some employee is innocently injured, the latter can recover damages.

The fundamental rule resting upon all employers is as follows:—

> Employers must provide for their employees a reasonably safe place to work, and must maintain it in a reasonably safe condition during the employment, having regard to the character of the employment and to the danger that a reasonably prudent man would expect to encounter under the circumstances of each particular case.

Of course every kind of employment has a standard of safety all its own. Without doubt bakeries can be conducted in a sanitary manner, therefore a bakery conducted in an unsanitary manner is below the standard, and its owner is guilty of negligence on that account. Some businesses are necessarily dangerous, and the employees know that when they enter it. Therefore they could not recover damages which resulted from an accident which was the natural result of that kind of business. The average business, however, is not in itself dangerous or even risky, and the employer who subjects his employees to any unnecessary dangers, either through something like machinery, or through the filthy way he kept his place, is liable to injured employees in damages.

An employee of any business assumes all the ordinary risks of that business, and he assumes all other risks which while they may not be the ordinary risks of the business, are nevertheless so open and obvious that he cannot fail to see them. Here is this rule, quoted from a leading case:—

> If the place is obviously unsafe so as to charge the employee with knowledge thereof, and he nevertheless enters on the work, he assumes the risk.

In such a case, as I have already said, he could not recover damages if anything happened. If an employee knows of the danger in going ahead with the work, under conditions as they exist, or if the danger is so evident that an ordinarily prudent man would have seen it, and he continues in the employment without complaint, or without assurance by the employer that the danger will be lessened or obviated, he cannot hold the employer liable for injuries received in such employment.

Employers' liability laws, such as are being gradually passed by the different States, do not usually prevent an employer from making the defense, in an action for damages, that his employee was guilty of contributory negligence, or that he incurred the risk with his eyes open. Such laws can do this, however, if the legislature wishes to make them do so, and they have been held to be constitutional in at least one State.

When could an employee be held, by going ahead, as having consented, so to speak, to work in an unsafe place? In the case of the Illinois correspondent's bakery, it would have to be shown, to convict the employee of carelessness in continuing to work, that the premises were so filthy and foul that any ordinary uncultivated baker should have known that if he stayed there he would run the risk of tuberculosis or some other disease. That would be a hard thing to prove, and I am afraid the employer in that case would have very little chance of escape. With three doctors ready to swear that the premises were in condition to breed tuberculosis, and with an employee, exposed to those conditions, contracting tuberculosis, it would appear as if the case against him w complete, unless he could show

1.—The man's disease did come from that; he had it before came with me. Or

2.—The premises were not such a condition as to make tul culosis certain or even likely.

3.—If they were, it could not helped. Unsanitariness is an in arable incident of the business.

4.—The employee knew all at it and preferred to take a cha rather than try to get another

The above principles a equally to all kinds of dangers– sufficient lighting, unguarded st ways or hatchways, exposed chinery, improperly guarded vators, or faulty elevators, bo left lying around in dimly ligh places to fall over, and all sort conditions which make a busi house unsafe to employees.

What is the measure of dama in such cases? It is such a sun will compensate the injured ployee for his pain and suffer cover the cost of doctors, nur medicine, etc., give him back wages he lost while laid up, and his earning power is permane impaired—make that up to him a If he dies, his family can get of the above items, except that stead of getting enough to c impaired earning power, the will be compensation for comp loss of the man's earnings fo period equal to the difference tween his age when he died and age to which he would proba have lived under the tabul average.

Taking an Interest in Clerks After Business Hours.

You know some fellows talk a lot about how a man with a store, who has clerks, ought to look after 'em a bit after hours. They say it ain't right to feel that a man has no put with his clerks after the store closes; that they can do as they darned please after that. They say a fellow ought to show some interest in his clerks all the time, so as to get sort of closer to 'em, and get 'em friendly—make 'em feel he's a sort of pal. This is the idea—that anybody with blood will work a plumb lot harder for an old pal than he will for just a boss. Ain't a bad idea, is it?

There's something in it, but sometimes it don't work out worth a darn. I know a fellow who tried it—a customer of mine. He ain't a very sociable man by nature, though he'd like to be—it's the way he's built. He reads a lot of trade papers and magazines and eats up all he can see about how clerks ought to be treated and so on, and he really wants to get close to his men in every way he can. The trouble is he ain't the kind of a man that can pat even one of his own clerks on the back. It don't come to him natural. If he patted you on the back it would be assault and battery.

He told me all about this thing. He said he felt he wasn't close enough to his people. Everything was as cold as a fish and he couldn't seem to help it. Then he thought he'd start inviting his clerks up to his house to dinner one by one, with their wives, if they had any, and see if they wouldn't invite him to theirs. As it happened the first clerk he asked couldn't come to his house, for his wife wasn't going out just then. You and me, being married men, know why. But she would be tickled to have the boss and his wife come there for dinner, and so he went.

"I got into an infernal trap," he told me.

"Why?"

"I'll tell you. My wife has money of her own and she believes in wearing good clothes. I couldn't dress her the way she dresses, but since it's her own money I don't consider it's any of my business what she spends it for. When we went down there that night she wore a long fur coat and some pretty good jewelry and James' wife took notice right away. She talked about the madam's clothes from the time we went in there, asked the price of everything and oh'd and ah'd about it until I nearly got mad and said something."

"But, good Lord, man," I said, "it was all a compliment, wasn't it?"

"No, it wasn't. Wait till I tell you. After a while she brought the conversation around to wishing she could have such things; said she did have them before she was married—great for James—and ended up by asking me if I couldn't give James a raise! Right at her own table and me an invited guest!"

"Some crust," I said. "How did you get away with it? What did James say?"

"Didn't open his mouth. Told me afterward he was afraid to on account of his wife's condition. Said she might have gotten hysterical. Oh, she did it right! Told me about how they would need a lot more money now that the baby was coming, and how James had borrowed money from her father and a lot more!"

"Well, I'm waiting to hear what you did," I said.

"Oh, I just said, 'Mrs. Ball, I make it a rule never to talk business when I'm out in the evening enjoying myself. James and I will talk it over some time when the time comes."

To arrange this display, first cover the bottom of the window with white crepe paper. Along the sides stack cans of salmon and tuna. On platters in the centre display cleaned herring, bloaters and strips

Make a background in the rear of ten cent size sardines in cartons, as in cut. Place a small price tag on each kind. Cut a sign card out of cardboard in the shape of a fish, cover it with white paper and letter in black. Finish the fins, tail and eyes as in illustration.

Organized Merchants of Somerville, N. J., Hold "Great $1.00 Week." The Plan and How It Worked

During One Week of February Each Member of the Somerville Association Made Attractive $1.00 Offers, Which Were Largely Advertised. The Advertising Done and Statements of Results from Participants.

The organized retailers of Somerville, N. J., did a clever thing a few weeks ago which is worthy of some space in this journal. Inspired by the Somerville Merchants' Association, they arranged a "Great $1 Week," during which all members who could, made special offerings for $1. It was practically a co-operative advertising plan, in which all the local merchants joined in order to help the general business of the town at that time.

The plan was advertised both in the local newspapers and through a huge circular printed on both sides. The size was 15 x 22 inches, and there was nothing on it but advertising, each member of the association taking a certain space and making his $1 offer if he had any to make. The principal side of the sheet is here reproduced in much reduced form:—

The reverse side was much like this, but contained advertisements of somewhat larger size.

This idea is so interesting and so easily adopted by the merchants of any small town or city—Somerville has a population of 4,843—that this journal has taken the pains to obtain from practically everyone of the association members who advertised, an expression of his views as to the value of the plan and what results he got from it. These statements follow, led by one from the secretary of the association, who is in the dry goods business:—

Relative to the One Dollar Week, which the merchants of Somerville held last month, although the weather conditions were against us, we sold a great amount of goods (mostly winter merchandise). It was an excellent advertising scheme. The clothiers and dry goods merchants profited more than the grocers.

It is generally conceded that the sale was a great success.

GEORGE P. NEVINS, Corresponding Secretary.

The One Dollar Week sale was a success, considering the bad weather intervening, preventing rural people from attending.

C. K. LEVY,
Enterprise Clothing Co.

The great One Dollar Week would have been a great success had we had the right kind of weather for a town like Somerville, but it so happened that the roads were in a terrible condition, so we had to depend on our own town people. But as it was several merchants did fine. Yes, I think the scheme was a good one, so much so that Plainfield followed it up with a Dollar Day, and they say it was great.

Mr. John Davis, in our town, one of the leading grocers, tells us it was one of the best ads. he ever had.

SAMUEL AYRES,
Dry Goods.

Will say that the ad. referred to was not only in poster form, but inserted in all the county papers, of which we have about six.

The results were an agreeable surprise to me, my sales were nearly double during the Dollar Week, and consisted not only of the specials, but the general lines also. Personally I can not say too much in favor of the sale.

J. N. DAVIS,
Groceries.

In regard to the Somerville One Dollar Week sale in which I advertised, would say that in this particular case we did very little business in any line, owing to a great snow storm which we had at that time. This was my first experience advertising in this way, though had the weather been favorable I think I could have given a very different report.

AUGUSTUS DURYEA,
Somerville Garage.

Am always pleased to do what I can for fellow advertisers and merchants. Would say in reference to our One Dollar Week that it was a decided success, even though we were practically snowed in. All our specials were taken up by the public in less than two days. Personally I had the pleasure of cleaning my stock of all odds and ends, shop-worn goods and stock which I had not bothered to take account of in three years. No ads. that I ever put out brought so many in my store, and that helped me clean up my regular stock at a fair profit. It was an ad. that was far-reaching and brought a lot of new customers to our town, and thereby helped the principal aim of our association to widen the scope of our town in trade drawing. We are always looking for new boom schemes and would appreciate any suggestion you could give us along that line.

F. GOTIS THOMAS,
Men's Clothing.
President Somerville Merchants' Association.

We report that the Dollar Week was a partial success only, largely owing to very bad weather conditions. The dry goods, department stores, clothing stores, etc., had more success than the grocery stores. It was an opportunity for them to clean up some odds and ends of stock that they were glad to clean up at a price. The thing advertised our town and we are getting benefits from it in every effort made.

If you could see our town on a pleasant day when the roads are good you'll find our main street full of people, autos, wagons, etc.

J. B. LOSEY, Grocer.

We can only say that our town was somewhat snowbound at the time, and while it brought several people to our store that were not in the habit of visiting us, we did only a small increased business.

J. C. HENRY,
Central Garage.

Would say the weather and traveling was so bad during our One Dollar Week that it was hardly a fair test. We think we had many more people in our town and in our store during the week than we would have had without the advertisement and they bought the goods advertised, which in most cases were old stock, hard to sell and marked below cost. At selling old stock we would say it was a success.

TERRIBERRY & KENNEY,
Dry Goods and Notions

This advertisement cost us $5 and more and did not do us even 5 cents' worth of good in any direct way that we know of.

F. BEHN & Co.,
Grocers.

Owing to a large blizzard at the time of the One Dollar Week in Somerville, we are unable to say that it did us any good, as the blizzard put a stop to everything in our line.

I am sorry that I cannot give you more definite information, but such was the case.

J. O. HOAGLAND,
Automobiles and Vehicles

The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" ventures the suggestion that some of the merchants participating in this affair would have gotten better results had they made definite offers of something for $1. A few of them advertised in the most general way, for instance the Imperial Tea Co. on the last column.

Canadian Mail Order Houses Working for Foothold in This Country

The "National Supply Co.," of Windsor, Ontario, Seeking to Break In. Offer Agents Twenty Per Cent. Commission to Take Orders. Nothing Said About the Duty. Some Sample Values.

Now that the tariff on food products has been reduced, the Canadian mail-order houses are endeavoring to secure a foothold in this country. The following advertisement has appeared in the classified columns of various daily newspapers within the last two weeks:—

> EARN $15 weekly showing samples for large Canadian Grocery Mail Order House. Men wanted everywhere in the U. S. Outfit free. National Supply Co., Windsor, Ontario, Canada.

A "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" representative was instructed to go after this, and an answer to it brought the literature of the scheme. Although the "National Supply Co.," Windsor, Ontario, Canada, claims in its letter that "as to our reliability we will refer you to the commercial agencies where you will find our ratings," a search of the agency books fails to find their name at all.

The National Supply Co. has two schemes, which it thus describes:

> We can furnish two plans free, you can use one or both, one our canvassers' plan, the other the mail order plan, for those who do not wish or have not the time to canvass. We supply circulars, etc., which you can mail to your friends or you can place small advertisements in some of your nearby papers, reading something like this: "Best granulated sugar, 3 cents per pound, cut rate groceries; send for price lists." This will bring you a large number of inquiries and when they reply, mail them a circular and orders are sure to come. This small advertisement will cost only 15 to 25 cents a paper. The circulars we furnish you do not bear our name anywhere, so that all orders must come to you and you get the full benefit of your work. We do not use any means whatever to deprive you of your customers, and we will not sell one penny's worth of goods except through our representatives, and give you a binding agreement to this effect.
> When you get an order keep your commission and send the order to us and we will ship it to you or direct to your customer if you like. In this way you will not have any bother whatever with handling the goods.
>
> You can sell goods wherever you like, to dealers, boarding houses, restaurants or private families, anywhere that you can get orders.
> We will allow you to sell as large or as small an order as wanted and do not compel your customers to buy assortments or lots if they do not wish, as they can make their their own selection from the open lists in the catalogues if certain articles only are wanted.

The regular plan is an ordinary mail-order plan. The details of the scheme are still further revealed by the following agreement which agents are asked to sign:—

> Gentlemen:—You will find inclosed with this agreement the sum of $5.00 to be in payment for one sample order No. 1, which is to be shipped to me at once from your American supply house.
> It is also agreed that the outfit and agent's supplies, consisting of grocery catalogues, order sheets, envelopes and advertising price circulars, are to be sent free with this order, and which I agree to use in securing customers. I also agree to make no misrepresentations to secure customers, and to deal honestly with the public at all times.
>
> It is also agreed by the company that after I receive the sample order and outfit that I shall be allowed to deduct a commission of 20 per cent. on all orders sent you and that I shall also be entitled to your special prepaid freight offer.
> The company also agrees that all goods shipped to me or my customers shall be fresh, clean, full weight and just as represented, or they may be returned at the company's expense, and all money sent for same shall be refunded to me or my customers.
> The company also agrees to assist me in every way in making a success and also agrees that they will not ship any orders to any of my customers without my consent.

With all of the above came a price-list, which shows some sensationally low values. Here are some of them:—

> Granulated sugar, 3 cents lb.; Dutch Cleanser, 6 cents; 2 bars Ivory soap, 5 cents; 8 bars Fels soap, 25 cents; 2 packages Uneeda biscuit, 5 cents; 1 box Two-in-One shoe polish, 5 cents; 10 bars Lenox soap, 25 cents; 1-lb. can Royal baking powder, 30 cents.

All American brands, it is noted. There is also a sample $5 order, the items of which are as follows:

While the grocery trade is in a generally satisfactory condition, some attention is being given to the prospects of business and financial affairs as a whole, and especially that attitude of what is called big business, or may otherwise be referred to as Wall street interests.

There is no question that at least a considerable part of the large interests seem disturbed over recent activities of the Washington administration in the matter of continuing suits against corporations of various kinds known as trusts, and in some other matters. It does not take much inquiry to learn that a large part of the big interests are acutely disappointed in these recent activities of the administration.

The liquidation of express companies is cited as a warning of what is to come. The idea of the Government taking over telephone and telegraph companies, beginning with the telephone companies, has been especially displeasing to many of the large financiers.

The direct effect on every-day business is indicated in the disposition credited to the large financiers to sit tight and await developments before undertaking further business enterprises. If this be the position of a considerable part of the financiers, as is now stated, certainly it must have an important effect on trade in the immediate future. The figures showing a contraction in steel business in the last month seems t dicate that this is actually taking p

Sell FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR Instead of Bothering with Bags

One of our machines can fill 127 CARTONS with FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the time it takes to fill, fold and tie a paper bag. There are 127 more sensible things to do in a grocery store than put up sugar; it's not only a foolish waste of time, even if the boy does it, but besides the cost of the labor you must also take the cost of the bags and the twine and the loss from overweight out of the slender margin of profit.

FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR is ready to sell when you get it; it's as handy as cans of tomatoes or bottles of pickles. It's a tight, neat, clean, convenient, sanitary package that will please your customers as much as yourself. The CARTON does not burst on the way to a customer's home and let the sugar get over everything in the basket or box, it does not burst or fall over and spill when customers handle it. Women like its cleanliness; they like the sparkling white purity of the sugar. Once you start them buying it, they will always buy it.

You can buy FRANKLIN CARTON SUGAR in the original CONTAINERS of 24, 48, 60 and 120 lbs.

Mail Order Houses and the Parcel Post.

When the parcel post bill was pending in Congress, and it was charged that it was conceived in the interest of the mail-order houses, the latter concerns gently and tolerantly reproved those who charged this, saying that they were not in the least interested in parcel post. In fact they made an exceedingly ingenious argument which aimed to prove that parcel post would hurt them.

The parcel post bill was passed and has been in force about fifteen months. Already it has had the effect of driving the United States Express Company out of business. Nobody is especially sorry to see it go. Dealing with it and other express companies, when they had things all their own way, was neither economical nor satisfactory. This, however, is by way of gratuitous comment. What we started out to do was to reproduce a portion of the ante-mortem statement issued by the United States Express Co., in which is revealed just what interest the mail-order houses have reason to feel in parcel post. Here it is:—

> In the first year of operation of the parcel post law one mail order house turned over to the parcel post more than 1,000,000 shipments that otherwise would have gone by express. The transportation loss to the Government on those parcels was something more than the amount that the mail order house saved, which was fine for the mail order house, but tough on those other prosperous "incomers" out of whom the revenue had to be raised to meet the deficiency.
> That about illustrates what the parcel post has put the express companies up against.

If the parcel post law had not been passed, according to the above, this mail-order house would have paid more on every one of one million packages than it pays now, because they would then have gone by express and been charged for at a profit over cost, while now they go by parcel post and are not charged for at profit over cost, but at less than cost. Every parcel mailed nets the Government a loss.

If this is true, of course the mail-order houses have no interest in parcel post!

Time Limit Needed for Convention Addresses.

There ought to be a time limit put on every set address at a trade convention. The writer becomes more firmly convinced of that every convention he attends. The promoters of a convention lay out the time among probably half a dozen speakers. Usually, no special period is assigned to any of these—they are allowed to suit themselves. Unpracticed in the art of condensation, they are sure to come, some of them at least, with papers twice too long. The entire programme is upset, the time which ought to be given over to pregnant discussion is all consumed by speakers who talk long after they have ceased to have anything to say.

Few subjects are so complica that the average speaker can present all he has to say on them twenty minutes, and fifteen minu will do in the average case. Th is no excuse whatever for speaker who takes three-quarters an hour, unless he is told to. two of the best managed conv tions the writer has ever atten —both held recently—each spea was told in advance that he was pected to fill so much time and more, and that if he overstepped limit he would embarrass eve thing and everybody that came af him. To make assurance dou sure, a red light flashed in front him as he was speaking when time expired. Result, the p gramme unfolded precisely as it planned to, every item of busin which it was arranged to dispose was disposed of, and better yet, convention was not bored to de with long talks that should h been short.

Selling Cheap and Shoddy Merchandise

The poor have no greater enemy than the merchant who sells cheap and shoddy goods. Usually this is a department store.

Only the poor are affected, because nobody else buys such stuff.

In Philadelphia there is such a concern. It has built up a very large business in this class of merchandise, by far the greater part of which is absolute shoddy.

Men's arctics, 69 cents.

Women's russet shoes, 95 cents.

Men's "all wool" suits, $6.50.

And a thousand other items, all apparently priced at amazingly low prices, yet priced exorbitantly if the truth were known. Trash, utter trash!

Men and women who have to plan the spending of every penny crowd into this place and other places like it, and eagerly buy these "bargains," as they believe them to be. They are invariably deceived. Arctics at 69 cents and shoes at 95 cents are never bargains—they are frauds! The arctics will succumb to the first deep slush, and the shoes may last a month. The men's "all wool" $6.50 suits would even when new, show the cotton in them to an expert; when they have been worn a little while they will show it to anybody. The trimmings, the sewing, the workmanship, are all as cheap as dirt and about as valuable.

The poor workman who buys shoes at 95 cents or $1 pays more in the course of a year for shoe leather than the man who pays $5 for his shoes. The cheap shoe has never been made that will last a year, or even six months, while $5 shoes ought to do it without the slightest trouble. Admittedly it is hard to make a poor man see this. It is hard to make him pay $5 for shoes when he can get them for 95 cents. But it can be done. One shoe dealer of the writer's acquaintance did it in one case by letting the customer pay for a pair of $5 shoes by installments. The cheap shoes he had been buying lasted about two months, so he paid the price of a cheap pair down on the $5 pair, and every two months after that paid a similar sum until the whole was paid. When the time came that all the cheap shoes he would have bought for $5 would have been gone, the single $5 pair was still on the job and good for several more months.

After that there was no trouble.

While a merchant is justified in selling people what they demand, still the selling of shoddy merchandise is a particularly heartless thing. Everybody who handles it—except the consumer—knows it is worthless. They know it will not give the service. They know the buyer is not getting a fair return for even this little money.

One reason for the high cost of living, among the poor at least, is the delusion that a low price nec sarily means an economical p chase. The fact that a child's ov coat may be dear at $1.50 ne seems to occur to them.

The rich are just as bad. T figure that anything that costs a must be good, and through their lusion they are stung as badly the poor are through theirs.

A price means nothing in its Only when some quality is tac to it does it become a high o low price.

There ought to be a law forb ding the manufacture of ch and shoddy merchandise, and f bidding its sale even when sold what it is. It ought to be sw out of the market because it is good—it has no right to ex Good honest merchandise can sold cheap enough to be wit everybody's reach, and that is only kind we ought to have.

nadium Steel in Hardware.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 11, 1914.

r Sir:—The clipping from the 1 2d issue of the "Modern Mer- and Grocery World," entitled, idium in Hardware Is a Trade ," is at hand, and in reply we advise that the statements in the quoted from a "prominent man- irer" are entirely at variance with the facts. Instead of its being true that not an ounce of vanadium has been seen in this country for fully two years, there have been a great many tons of vanadium produced by this company alone annually for the last seven years from their own deposits in Peru. In 1912 there were over 90,000 tons of vanadium steel blooms, billets, bars, forgings and castings produced—last year a still greater amount was produced.

Neither is it true that vanadium, as applied to products coming under the name of hardware, is strictly a trade name and not descriptive literally of the articles so designated. A large number of manufacturers of saws, carpenter tools, cutlery, etc., are using vanadium steel in their product. Among these can be named off-hand: Simonds Mfg. Co., Lockport, N. Y.; Henry Disston & Sons Co., Tacony, Philadelphia, Pa.; E. C. Atkins Saw Co., Indianapolis, Ind.; Pennsylvania Saw Co., Frackville, Pa.; Detroit Saw Co., Detroit, Mich.; Canton Cutlery Co., Canton, Ohio; American Cutlery Co., Chicago, Ill.; Van Doren Mfg. Co., Chicago Heights, Ill.; Fayette R. Plumb, Inc., Philadelphia, Pa., as well as manufacturers of metal cutting saws and other similar tools which do not properly come under the name of hardware.

It is very evident that though the source of your information was "impartial," he was at the same time absolutely uninformed on the subject. Thanking you for calling the matter to our attention and assuring you that if we can furnish any other facts in regard to the application of vanadium in the field covered by your journal we will be very glad to do so, we remain,

Yours truly,

The Burden of Returned Goods.

Chicago, March 11, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—In our March catalogue and in the March number of "The Butler Way" we had an article entitled "The Returned Goods Tax," which, judging by the number of comments we have heard, seems to have started something. I am inclosing in this letter a copy of the articles in question.

The comments we speak about have come both from retailers and jobbers. Retailers have written us thanking us for the information contained in the article and saying that they regarded it as a valuable plan for them to follow. Jobbers have written us thanking us for saying in such a straightforward manner some things they have for a 21—You should push nationally advertised goods to the front because they let you turn your capital quicker and thus increase your returns.

¶ Say you have $100 invested in each of two brands. One is nationally advertised, the other is not. If you and your clerks work hard enough, you may be able to sell the stock of unadvertised goods in four months. Let us say you make 30 per cent. on them.

¶ If in four months you can sell $100 worth of goods for which there is no general demand, and which you must absolutely sell outright, you could have sold $100 worth of advertised products which are in regular everyday demand, in two months. Suppose you only make 25 per cent. on these, you have made 50 per cent. on advertised goods in four months, against 30 per cent. on goods not advertised.

¶ Even if the advertised goods had only paid twenty per cent., they would have been more profitable to you.

You fill the orders, we'll do the rest.

long time been wanting to say themselves. Some of these jobbers have gone so far as to ask us to allow them to reproduce this article in some of their literature and give us credit for it.

Of course, you don't need us to tell you that the returned goods business is something very close to the heart and bank account of every jobber—every retailer, too, for that matter. If some way can be found to reduce this tax the profits of everybody concerned will be larger.

Now, it has seemed to us that it would be a mighty good thing for the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" to take up this question and wage a campaign for the good of both the jobber and the retailer. We are saying this because of our conscientious belief that the time is ripe for some good, hard knocks in this direction. We offer you our services and our co-operation and will be pleased to hear what you think of it. You are at liberty to reproduce the inclosed article if you wish and it will give me much pleasure to see that you are supplied with any other matter along this line that may fit in with the "Modern Merchants and Grocery World's" way of doing things.

Yours truly,
BUTLER BROS.
G. A. Nichols.

Mr. Nichols sent a copy of his article, which is too long to reproduce in full. The following portions are well worth publishing, however:—

We doubt whether one single retailer who reads this article realizes how serious the problem of returned goods has become to the wholesaler.

To any man who loves good, clean, salable merchandise, the sight of the "junk" which flows into the returned goods section of any jobbing house is one to bring tears.

The word "junk" describes precisely the state in which about 90 per cent. of the goods are when returned. Boxes are broken, wrappers torn, contents mussed. The goods cannot go back in stock, but must be sold as "jobs" at maybe 50 per cent. of their value when they left our hands.

Who pays the loss? We do—directly; you do—indirectly. For it is just as necessary that our prices cover depreciation in merchandise as it is that yours do.

The problem of returned goods in your store is very different from what it is in ours. When one of your customers wishes to return an article, she brings it in herself and it can go into stock unspoiled. It is a rare man or woman who dares to bring back in person goods that have been used or kept so long they are out of date.

When goods are to be shipped by freight to some far off good-natured jobber, who will probably think it better to swallow his loss and sell them for what he can, it is easy to forget how different the case will appear when the goods are opened up after their long journey.

It is our experience that just about one hundred merchants out of a hundred mean to be fair. When one of them seems not to be fair, we usually find it is because he does not understand all the circumstances.

When we or any other jobber by mistake ships you something you did not order, or the goods are defective, or not as represented, the loss should of course be his and not yours. But to ship them back without notice is the most expensive and most wasteful thing you can possibly do.

You will do him only simple justice if you assume the mistake was not intentional. And surely it is not fair deliberately to penalize him needlessly for what is at worst a blunder.

If you will first write your jobber, he may be willing to grant an allowance that will make you happy to keep the goods. Or he may have some customer nearby to whom they can be transferred at small cost. Possibly he may prefer to have you keep them with his compliments.

If then he writes you to ship the goods back, the few days' delay will have cost you nothing and you will have the saisfaction of having done what you can to reduce the Returned Goods Tax.

"Don't Pay the Retailers' Price for Coffee," Says Gillies Co. to Consumers, "Buy of Us Direct"

Amazing Insult Offered Retail Trade by Gillies Coffee Co., of New York. Advertising Coffee Direct to Consumers, Offering to "Save Them Retail Profit." Selling Retailers Coffee and Spoiling Its Resale.

Is there any meaner crime than to sell coffee to a retail grocer and then prevent him from selling it by going to his customer and offering to sell him yourself, less "the middleman's profit"? This journal knows of none; the offense mentioned seems to contain all the elements of gross unfairness and contemptible meanness.

The latest concern to commit this crime is the Gillies Coffee Co., 239 Washington street, New York, a jobbing and packing house, the head of which, E. J. Gillies, delivered an address at the last convention of the National Coffee Roasters' Association in New York, in which he said that retail grocers ought not to be allowed to buy green coffee. His reason was this: "It certainly spoils our business completely to turn a customer from a roasted coffee customer to a green coffee customer."

That, however, was only narrow and selfish. It does not compare in malignity with the following, which has just appeared in the mail-order classified columns of various Eastern newspapers:—

GILLIES COFFEE CO.,

Now remember that the Gillies concern's principal business is done with retail grocers. So far as we know, it is just now beginning to sell consumers direct. In spite of this, its promise to consumers is "saving you retail profit." Even worse is the amazing statement, "Don't pay the retailer's price for coffee. Buy from us, one of New York's oldest wholesalers, direct."

This is nothing less than the foulest kind of an insult to the retail trade, particularly to that part of it supplied by the Gillies concern at wholesale, and it ought to be treated as such.

Preventing the Shrinkage in Meats That Absorbs Retail Profits.

Clearfield, Pa., March 13, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Your article on page 28, issue of March 9th, showing block test on a carcass of beef made by Mr. Charles G. Deibel, of St. Louis, is one of considerable interest. This article, however, could be made much more profitable to your readers if the shrinkage, which you note was "not allowed for," might be shown. The "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" could engage in no greater crusade for the benefit of the retail trade than one in which the actual shrinkage on meat cutting could be hammered into the average meat seller. This class of trade, unfortunately, seems to regard the difference between cost and selling price as gross profit, and have little or no idea as to what the actual block shrinkage means. Our experience, going over a number of years, and representing tests made with the most extreme care, demonstrates that this department alone carries a shrinkage of 20 per cent. on the selling value of the product. This may, perhaps, be excessive through the fact that we handle nothing but dressed beef and utilize but little of the trimmings; also through demands made by the trade of having meat closely trimmed. These figures, however, are correct, and doubtless if some of your readers in this line would attempt to make a practical test of their shrinkage, many actual cases of loss on sales could be stopped.

We ourselves would be interested in knowing exactly what Mr. Deibel's experience as to shrinkage might have been in this particular block test.

Yours truly,

Wants a Farmer to Ship Him Eggs.

Philadelphia, March 17, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—Please let me know in next week's issue of some farmer about 400 miles from here who sells and ships eggs.

Thanking yon in advance,
Yours truly,
OTTO BOESE.

We do not have the name of a farmer shipping eggs in this manner; farmers usually trade in their eggs at their local stores and the stores send them to the large markets. A large number of our subscribers do this and you will probably hear from some of them after thcy read your letter.

The Staley Stock Again.

Narberth, Pa., March 18, 1914.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—I have a contract before me from the Staley Starch Co., of Baltimore, Md., offering stock. Would you advise an investment in this stock? What do you know of the above company? Yours truly,
E. B. Cox.

We do not recommend this stock as an investment for retail grocers. The Staley Co. is a Baltimore starch concern which has for years been trying to sell its stock to grocers. We believe the stock to be a bad investment, first, because it will tend to tie the grocer to the sale of starch which it may not be good business for him to sell; and, second, because distant investments like this, which the minority stockholders can never control, are always risky and unsatisfactory.

The high prices of 1911 stimulated planters in all of the sugar produ countries to increase the acreage cane and beets, according to the st ment of men in the trade. It is pointed out that sugar is a commo in which any changes in prices qui reach the consumer because of the eral practice of selling on the clo kinds of margins.

The chain stores always feature c sugar in order to draw trade, in the pectation of making profits in o lines, and the regular grocers have usally been obliged to follow the s practice in selling sugar at or clos cost. The wholesalers also sell st on the closest kind of margins, as been the case for years.

Selling Talks With Clerks

BY A MAN WHO HAS BEEN ONE

Conducted by W. E. SWEENEY, Manager for L. Lehman & Co.'s Department Food Stores, Dover, N. J.

Endive.—(Pronounced "On-deve.") You are aware that the demand for it is growing—that it is a very attractive vegetable, somewhat after the lettuce family, but far more rare and commanding in France most elaborate cultivation.

How often have you been asked how it's used?

How often have you given the correct answer?

It's cut up, placed on a lettuce leaf, French dressing added and strips of sweet red peppers laid over it.

Now that's a very simple answer. But it's one of those telling answers. One clerk's answer was, "It's eaten with pepper and salt." This young man put his own construction on the thing. Just 'pepper and salt" don't appeal to endive buyers.

What we are getting at is that it's a good thing to know what might be termed "little niceties," because in trying to sell a thing the commonplace descriptive talk is relieved and the subject made more interesting by a suggestion as to how it could be served.

In selling a roast of lamb, for instance, wouldn't many a customer be pleased to have you offer her a bottle of C. & B. dried mint leaves, saying that a teaspoonful of mint with a wine glass of vinegar added makes a sauce that is indispensable to a well-served lamb dinner?

* * *

By all means study these "little niceties," and when you sell grapefruit to people of means tell them about your maraschino cherries—how often they're called for now where this fruit is served.

Again: How many people will refuse buying a bottle of horse radish when held up to them after purchasing their Saturday night frankfurters?

* * *

Your customers aren't paid to think—we are.

Your customers are thoughtless, forgetful, unsystematic in a lot of their buying. They sit down to eat their lettuce salad and there's no vinegar—our fault.

The macaroni is half prepared and there's no cheese—our fault.

The pot cheese is ready for the sauce pan but there's no cream—our fault.

The little sardine spread is all ready and there isn't a lemon in the house—our fault.

* * *

Our fault not from her standpoint, but our fault from our standpoint.

We didn't associate things. We didn't put thought into the sale. We were simply inefficient.

Open your eyes, boys, to the naked truth, take it right home, because I won't change the word. It stands—"inefficient."

* * *

But you're not going to have that ambition killing word darkens your mental activity any more, you see things in a new light now.

You'll begin to-morrow, and it will be flour—yeast cake—beans—salt pork. Pancake flour—syrup. Coffee—evaporated milk. End of ham—cabbage. Boiled ham—prepared mustard. Raw oysters—tabasco sauce. Sauer kraut—franks. Lemons for lemonade—grape juice.

May you all enjoy the science of sales association.

MADE FRESH

Visitors to our factory often comment on the fact that we have no cold storage. We don't need it. We don't keep meats, we make them into soup the same day they are received.

One reason for the delicious natural taste of READYMAID CONCENTRATED SOUPS is that everything in them is FRESH and cooked while it has its full natural flavor. All the raw material that comes into our factory in the morning is a finished product by evening of the same day, and is sealed in a sanitary can without solder or acid. We like to show visitors the crisp, fresh vegetables; the clean, sweet, fresh meats; the fragrant spices. We like to show every corner of our factory—every process—because we are proud of the spotless cleanliness. Your customers' own kitchens could not be cleaner.

You should take pride in recommending READYMAID CONCENTRATED SOUPS to your customers. Their quality is guaranteed all the way to the consumer's table. They are the product of a concern that has been famous for over a quarter of a century for fine quality soups.

Besides the quality of READYMAID CONCENTRATED SOUPS, which insures steady sale, they PAY YOU BETTER than others; we give YOU an extra profit to push their sale, instead of spending the money for advertising.

Summarized Market Conditions.

Spot coffee is dull and prices steady. The buying is all of the hand-to-mouth kind. The quotations on desirable grades of Santos are from 11½ to 11⅝ cents, with a likelihood that consignments are being pressed for sale at concessions. Rios 7s are quoted at 8⅝ cents. The spot demand for mild grades seems to have improved a little. Prices are unchanged. There is not much doing in forward delivery, as jobbers seem to have supplies sufficient for immediate requirements and are picking up only small parcels.

Distributors are buying teas for current requirements, making a fairly large aggregate business, although most of the buying is in small lots. Brokers are hopeful for a still more active market, basing their belief on the moderate supplies in the country and expecting firmer prices before long. It is pointed out that the new crops will not begin to arrive here until July, and in the meantime the supplies will be getting low.

During the week refined sugar declined and the country bought in fair quantities at the low level. Prices reacted and trade is now quiet, the buyers not following the reaction in prices. Prices are now firm at 3.85 cents for standard granulated. Two of the companies which had been selling at 3.80 cents in the first part of the week are now with the others on the 3.85-cent basis.

There is not much activity in the rice market, but the trade expects a more active market with the arrival of real spring weather. Prices are firm. This is especially the case with desirable domestic rice. Intermediate grades are rather neglected, as they seem dearer than foreign rice. There is a somewhat steady business in Japans, but it is said that prejudices curtail the market for this rice.

There is a routine withdrawal demand for New Orleans molasses of grocery grades. Some interest is shown in the new Ponce which is now being marketed in Porto Rico and will be sold largely, it is expected, to local and New England distributors, especially to baking companies.

A fair demand is noted for spot supplies of Maryland tomatoes, No. 3s. Most of the demand is for lots of one or two carloads and this is said to indicate that jobbers are carrying very light supplies. Most of the inquiry is for goods without labels and buyers do considerable shopping in looking for extra qualities at inside prices. Most of the packers are asking 72½ cents for goods for buyers' labels, but there are occasional sales at 70 cents, the prices being f. o. b. Baltimore. No. 2s are in small compass and bring from 52½ to 55 cents at Baltimore, f. o. b. There is little interest in the few offerings of future tomatoes at 65 to 67½ cents, peninsula factory f. o. b. There is a quiet but steady movement in spot corn, especially in the more popular brands of Maryland Maine style. Holders are maintaining prices, but without advances. The packers have generally withdrawn offerings of futures, being content with business already contracted and not desiring to load up further with contracts at this time. Supplies of good quality of peas, seconds, at 70 cents have been pretty well cleaned up, and holders are now asking 72 cents as a rule. Buyers are not usually willing to pay the advance. There is a fair business in medium and finer grades of peas. Other lines of canned vegetables are selling steadily, with the market generally firm.

Canned fruits of nearly all kinds seem to be selling more actively, but on small orders. The offerings are light and prices firm.

There is a steady demand for spot dried prunes, but little attention is being given to forward shipments. The sales out of warehouse here are limited to the consuming demand, but this is sufficient to keep the market fairly active and the tone is strong, with the tendency of prices slightly upward. Peaches on the spot and for early forward shipment are getting more attention and the movement is expected to increase with the approach of warmer weather. Apricots are in light supply and little is offered for prompt shipment from the coast. The local demand is not urgent, however. Buyers are not disposed to place orders for the new crop at the prices mentioned in recent offerings. Raisins are firm, with an increasing demand. Currants are steady. Bag figs are getting into small compass and the market is firm, with an upward tendency. California bag figs have been selling quite freely here at 8½ to 9 cents. Layer figs of Smyrna packing are being cleaned up pretty closely. Some recent resales have been made from Western markets at 12 to 13 cents.

The market for all grades of canned fish is active, as usual during Lent. The tendency of prices of salmon, especially Sockeye and Chinook, is upward. Sardines are scarce and firm.

Some improvement is noted in the demand for flour. There is a wide range in prices asked. Some mills decline to sell for less than $4.60, while others are quoting $4.50 and making occasional sales for prices below that figure to especially desirable customers. Most of the actual business is close to $4.40, and buyers seem willing to pay higher prices only when they absolutely need some of the special brands.

Butter has been declining in the last week. The receipts have been in excess of requirements and there has been accumulations in all lines. Large quantities of storage butter have been forced on this market from Pennsylvania as a result of the new warehouse law in that State. Prices have become a secondary consideration in the desire of the receivers to move a portion of the receipts. Fresh creamery extras have dropped to 24½ to 25 cents; first, down to 23 to 24 cents; seconds, down to 21 to 22 cents. The held grades are from ½ to 1 cent less than fresh creamery. The best grades of process butter are quoted at 19 to 21 cents, with little demand.

There have been heavy declines in eggs and retailers have been reducing their prices to correspond with the low wholesale basis. The best grades of fresh Western eggs range from 20 to 22 cents, and the finest nearby eggs are sold for 23 cents. The best grades of duck eggs have a range from 35 to 37 cents.

Weather Turns Bad Rubber Season Into Good One.

Rubbers have had the call during the past fortnight at least. Throughout the Middle West and some sections of the East the weather man has appropriately furnished a brand of weather that has acted as a strong fillip to the sale of rubbers—boots and shoes, arctics, etc. This kind dispensation of Providence, in strictly a business sense, has made the heart of the rubber manufacturer palpitate with joy, and has stimulated the retail sales to a degree most welcome to the merchant at the close of what was being summed up as a quiet, if not a disappointing season. The discomforts were many and trying and sometimes harrowing to the public, and while all the sympathy in the world should be extended to the sufferers at large personally, still the merchant is to be congratulated on this unlooked for windfall.

The unexpected and rather sudden demand, reports from various places state, found the stocks of rubbers in the stores of the general merchant especially none too large or well assorted, with the jobbers not much better prepared to fill orders for prompt shipment. Hence manufacturers have been driven capacity and overtime to meet the call from the wholesale distributors, the reserve stocks in the factories melting away like snow under a warm sun. The run on rubbers and heavy footwear is again a pleasing reminder that it is an ill wind, indeed—including the accompanying snow—which blows no one good. Merchants are now looking forward to the arrival of spring selling with equanimity.

Do People Spend Money for Mo That They Ought to Spend for Shoes?

The rather fanciful theory been advanced that the "Mov are sapping the shoe buying p bilities of the people. Maybe can be figured out so far as population in the cities are cerned, but the towns and sma communities are not in such str The solid people come from rural sections, and their buyin the store of the general merc is not affected in the slightest such frivolities. Manufactu and jobbers are increasing t orders, and the fall prospects standard goods and novelties reported unusually bright. M sins of omission and commis are charged up against the "si drama," and that involving buying of shoes by the ultim consumer is the latest and a t far-fetched, to say the least.

Getting Shoes to Retail Stores M Quickly.

New-style shoes, quickly placed the retailer, are said by an authorit among the most profitable for the m ufacturer and the merchant. It t almost three weeks to put a lot of s through the factory, but the advisab of instituting twenty-four hour r now being agitated in shoe produ centers, would reduce this time t week. Doubtless the manufactu equipment would have to be augme and rearranged, and accompanying tails taken care of before the twe four hour factory could be realized, when it is, provided the new styles rushed out, the retailer will be gainer.

Movies Used to Demonstrate Sh Making.

At the recent State convention of Shoe Retailers' Association of Ka at Topeka, the "movies" were used explain the manufacturing processes making shoes. Models of ancient modern footwear were also thrown the screen, and a lecturer from the P licity Department of the United S Machinery Co., Boston, Mass., delive an accompanying address. This c pany is said to have a collection shoes, historical and otherwise, lar and more complete than the famed sortment at the Kensington Muse London, England, and that of Cluny France. The making of the present shoe, in all its stages, from pictures ta in the well-known Hanan & Son pla Brooklyn, N. Y., was particularly teresting and instructive to the retail merchants.

Retailers' Views of Manufacturers Who Have Retail Stores.

Shoe manufacturers who maintain a chain of retail stores for the direct distribution of their product are evidently not in the highest favor with a large number of the best-known merchants throughout the country. The latter are of the opinion they should sell the merchandise to the consumer or general public, restricting the manufacturers to their own particular field. One of the most outspoken and candid retailers anywhere is A. H. Geuting, secretary of the National Shoe Retailers' Association, whose capacious, handsome store and carefully selected stock is the admiration of every visitor, in and out of the trade.

Every Thursday, Friday and Saturday during the Bock Wurst season

Following our custom of the past several years we will cook this sausage instead of marketing it in a raw state, which will not only make it less perishable and cause it to stand shipping better, but will make the preparation thereof much easier.

DIRECTIONS

Cut links apart. Cut the casing lengthwise on two sides with the point of a sharp knife. Remove the casing by pulling it from end to end, by which method the meat will not adhere.

Brown a piece of butter in a pan, then fry the sausage long enough to heat it through, meanwhile gently shaking the pan. Serve hot.

brands, those made up according to his own ideas of what a good shoe should be, in which is embodied the experience of a lifetime as a high-class merchant, and general merchandise from the leading manufacturers. Consequently, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" takes it, he speaks along broad lines when he expressed himself as follows:—

"As a general proposition a manufacturer is unfitted by his own special work to retail shoes. His thoughts, ideas and judgment are trained to manufacture and wholesale and not to retail merchandising. When a manufacturer has entered the retail field his experience has been costly and in many instances disappointing. Naturally, the antagonism of the legitimate shoe merchant is aroused, and properly so. There are certain customs and practices inseparably connected with the business of shoe retailing—acquired only by long experience, study of conditions and close attention to many details in order to be successful by giving satisfactory service—of which the manufacturer is unfamiliar, if not totally ignorant.

"Say a manufacturer, possibly impatient over a conservatively growing sale of his particular make of shoes, comes and establishes a chain of stores in the large cities, he soon finds the expense far heavier than was imagined when the proposition was originally canvassed and finally decided upon. The cost of the up-keep alone—for they are almost always extravagantly managed—is startling and the marketing efficiency far from what it should be. Without mentioning names, I know manufacturers who have followed the retailing plan to their sorrow—financially and otherwise; in fact, been on the brink of ruin by a fatuous purpose of what I consider is a losing business policy—one that every independent, energetic dealer condemns as demoralizing to the trade and radically wrong in principle.

"A manufacturer should confine himself to making and not retailing shoes. He should give his undivided attention to his branch of the business exclusively and not attempt to compete with himself. It is the best of judgment for a manufacturer to make his product widely and favorably known to the buying public by National and trade advertising and other means of telling publicity—cannot do too much of it if judiciously handled, but leave the retailing or consumers' distribution in the regular and accepted selling channels. The dealer is far better equipped and more capable of doing his product justice in this respect than can ever be accomplished by his preempting the retail merchant's privileges and prorogatives.

"The trade mark or brand of the manufacturer, who is desirous and insistent upon maintaining his identity in connection with his product, is all right. It is to be highly commended; and if the reputable dealer's name is also carried by stamp or label in the shoe, it is a further guarantee of identification and genuineness of make. This, however, is another matter of lesser importance. The making and the selling of merchandise at retail are two distinct and separate lines of business and should remain so if success is the object of either the manufacturer or the dealer. When the former competes with the latter, and in whatever line of commercial activity it has been attempted—excepting for stock jobbing purposes—the utmost dissatisfaction is created primarily, if not financial loss ultimately."

Hardware

Two Well Known Hardware Men.

Tuesday afternoon the Hardware Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association held their regular monthly meeting in their rooms in The Bourse, Philadelphia. One of the questions that has claimed the attention of members for some time is what legal holidays are to recognized and observed by the jobbing houses. There is a diversity of opinion, and each firm has acted on its own initiative or been controlled by the pressure of business on the days referred to.

Charles Z. Tryon, president of the association and of the company with which he is connected, also handles firearms extensively besides hardware, sporting goods, etc., in speaking of the practice that had governed the situation, said: "Each firm has acted on its own volition in the matter, and so far as we are concerned we are and have been so busy that our place is being kept open even Saturday afternoons now." On being asked if his company's trade was specially strong on the sale of firearms, and a suggestion made that Mexico was a promising field at present, Mr. Tryon rejoined, with a hearty laugh: "Well, not particularly big, but the Mexican situation for trade in firearms is rather a leading or personal question, and we would rather be excused from answering."

The gentleman is one of the most active "boosters for Philadelphia" in business circles. Mr. Tryon is a progressive member of the Chamber of Commerce and is chairman of the Press and Entertainment Committees of that important body. He is now working on several plans to keep the Quaker City to the front in all things, one being the annual convention of a Nationally important section of manufacturers. Fayette R. Plumb, the vice-president of the Hardware Association, is the head of the important plant of Fayette R. Plumb, Inc., whose product is known far and wide. He is also a progressive, go-ahead gentleman of the most approved type.

A New Level Which is Attracting Some Attention.

The first radical departure of the well-known carpenter's spirit level is a "bob" level, for which letters patent have been issued, a working model constructed by the inventor, and it is now in the hands of the most progressive company in the world for earnest consideration and possible marketing. It is an ingenious, though simple tool, and its utility is apparent at a glance. Two small "bobs"—one horizontally adjusted and the other vertically placed to the plane, so as to be employed in either position. The "true level" is attained by means of the "bob" and the old spirit level is entirely superseded, the center as well as the level being attained at the same time.

As the inventor—a working carpenter—took the pains to make a very creditably finished model to demonstrate its practicability, and demonstrated its worth, naturally he displayed the example of his craftsmanship to jobbers and manufacturers, who "turned it down," as they could "not see anything in it." However, the firm referred to above do not "turn down" anything brought to their attention until the article submitted has been carefully examined, its selling possibilities and usefulness as a practical tool inquired into and weighed up. Nine times ten this method of procedure has covered the value of numerous that have eventually proven good ers—profitable alike to the manufacturer and exploiter and the ing and skillful inventor. The new level looks like another find.

Dry Goods and Notions

ch has been said and written the neglect of Americans in ting foreign trade. The at-usually defended by manuers is that domestic business d enough for them, and why about selling goods in other of the world where credits
ig, shipments hazardous, tar-

? This is the average view, it must be admitted; but there are other opinions and they are backed by energetic efforts to extend the use and sale of American brands, especially in dry goods and kindred lines in other parts of the world.

Among the enterprising houses that have a just conception of the importance and magnitude of foreign trade is Young, Smyth, Field Co., Philadelphia, who are now bending every effort toward the development and expansion of their export department. Having traveled Central and South American countries, acquiring desirable outlets for their products, they have gone a step farther and now propose to conquer Australia and the Orient. Their trade in the American colonial possessions—Porto Rico and the Philippines—is already established on a firm and profitable basis, and they anticipate like success in the South Pacific and Asia.

For some time Calvin M. Smyth, president of the company, has been studying the foreign situation and became convinced here was an opportunity for creating new trade, the potentialities of which could hardly be estimated. Mr. Smyth had started on a trip with the intention of ultimately going around the world with this end in view. He had reached Honolulu, H. I., when the recent death of the secretary of the company compelled his return home, where he arrived Thursday, March 5th. His plans, however, will be carried out by his splendid organization. E. A. Bateman, of the house staff, ably assisted by Otto Kafka, who has been seventeen years in the export business, has perfected a corps of expert salesmen, who are now "out in the field" doing yeoman service.

Besides their own extensive list of goods, the foreign contingent of the house is carrying fifty other lines of different manufacturers in all parts of the country. The assortment is amazing and runs the gamut of the best products—novelties as well as staples—of American brains and ingenuity—from automobiles, Universal trucks, clocks, to the finest articles in dry goods, wearing apparel, etc. The whole lot makes up three freight cars of samples. The selling staff in this unique expedition—an expression of American enterprise and indomitable commercial courage in the best sense—consists of six men, Mr. Kafka, who is now circling the globe for the eighth time, being in charge. They are now in Sydney, Australia, and in thirty days after arrival had booked $70,000 in orders.

The proposition, as outlined by Mr. Bateman, who has visited various parts of the country, "hooking up" lines for this new American invasion of the Far East on so broad a scale, is that a permanent selling organization will be established in each of the principal cities visited, and future business will be handled through these channels. After finishing with Sydney the Kafka corps will in turn stop in Melbourne, Victoria, New Zealand, Tasmania, China, Japan, Straits Settlements and South Africa. They will be away two years, and are now cabling orders in certain lines for immediate shipment. Their orders aggregate about $2,000 a day, and it is estimated the initial bookings for a year will total three to four millions, with the repeats going far beyond these so-called modest figures.

As Mr. Bateman truly remarked to the representative of this journal, "The export trade is not only growing, but this branch of business is the solution of the vexing problem that occurs whenever there is an overproduction of goods on the part of American manufacturers, and which is bound to occur every eight or nine years. The trade is practically on a cash basis; at least, so far as we are concerned. The world at large should be using more American goods and the time is not far distant when it will—not exactly dominate, that is a little too strong, perhaps—wield an influence in foreign markets that must be reckoned with by European factors and producers.

"As proof of this statement I may say," added Mr. Bateman, "that the other day A. W. Freibel, secretary of the German consulate in Philadelphia, called upon us and wanted to know what we were doing abroad. German consuls everywhere are required to submit official reports as to any new or unusual developments in their respective consular territories to the imperial government in Berlin. It is probable our activity in Sydney and elsewhere was the subject of a report, which was referred to the German Ambassador in Washington and then placed in the hands of the consul here for an explanation as to what we were up to. Hence the call of Mr. Freibel, whom I found to be a polished and very able

Useful Point About Washing

It is only a pointer, but tail merchant might keep a tap as talking points in sell for nothing more philant One is the laundering and linens, as follows:—

> The greatest care should be in using only the best and soaps. Alkali soaps, washing ders and similar preparations s be avoided. Wash thoroughly immediately rinse in fresh, soft water; wring out again again with fresh water unt traces of soap are removed. S and blue lightly, using very starch.

Domestic Worsteds and Cheaper Worsteds Imported.

Domestic manufacturers of fine worsteds have been able to place such good values on the market that the sale of foreign material is unexpectedly hampered. Of course, this was made possible only by the dropping of prices in a radical way. It is stated that many domestic fancy worsteds are from 10 to 15 cents a yard cheaper than European goods of similar quality are being offered. Aside from the more attractive values in domestic offerings, reports say buyers of men's wear will purchase foreign weaves only when the style and texture are distinctive. The question of delivery is of prime importance. Cassimeres and cloths suitable for general purposes are in good demand.

Looks Like Some Scarcity of Wool Dress Goods by Fall.

Western advices are to the effect that many silk fabrics are being sought. Salesmen out in the field report that merchants are doing well on light-weight wool fabrics and the Easter demands for suitable spring goods is remarkable. Indications point to a large business this fall in wool dress goods, with a firmer market and scarcity on fabrics that all distributors regard as popular sellers. Cotton messaline serges, on account of the present styles requiring foundation linings, are in increased demand. As one keen observer in the market expressed it, the elimination of considerable of the underclothing formerly worn by women has reached a point where silks alone for outer wear suggest too much "September morn," and therefore a little more underpinning is in order.

New Color Schemes in Silks.

Acording to the fashionable retailers, who usually supply the general merchant with points on prevailing styles, in silks color reigns supreme; colors so soft, yet so odd and varied as to give the impression of brilliance. Another dictinctive feature of the season is the continued use of soft, supple silks, which remain in favor because the voluminous draperies now in vogue are dependent upon them for their happiest effect.

To repeat, fashion is attuned to ribbons unequivocally this year. Stripes, plaids and gay colors are in the ascendency for spring, and ribbons with a dark background offset by rich, floral designs are a great success.

Following the color tendency of the season the early arrival of spring handkerchiefs show the pretty effect of combining blue, pink and lavender with white. Some have a white center, with a colored border in varying widths and colored embroidery; others have a colored center with white embroidery. The lots are quick sellers.

How to Make More Money Out of a Retail Coffee Department

Alive to the importance of this subject, the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" has arranged with Mr. Wm. B. Harris, coffee expert to the United States Department of Agriculture and president of the Wm. B. Harris Co., wholesale coffee dealers, New York, for a series of articles on the practical phases of this subject.

X.—The Place of Coffee Substitutes and Cheapeners.

By William B. Harris.

question of cheap coffees or unds is one that receives or less attention according to ction of the country in which aler is located. Chicory is n almost every section of the y in varying amounts in the package brands, selling to onsumer, and in restaurant .

cereals and other substitutes he possible exception of chic- e used for just one purpose, y, to reduce the cost of the ct. In the majority of cases true of chicory as well, al- n there are some blends, par- ly those used in moderate restaurants, where chicory d for the purpose of giving r and character to the bever- iat many prefer.

n in connection with restau- lends it is doubtful whether ery large quantity of chicory be consumed if the pur- was willing to pay the price good coffee and then use the necessary quantity to give satisfactory results.

The various cereals are advertised as fillers and their chief merit is in their similarity to ground coffee and the quantity that can be used with coffee and still produce a palatable beverage.

Notwithstanding all that may be said in favor of chicory, the fact still remains that a light roast chicory has appeared on the market with the recommendation that double the quantity may be used in place of chicory roasted to the regulation shade. When it is considered that chicory only costs from one-half to one-quarter as much as coffee, it requires very little argument to make perfectly clear that price is an important factor in connection with its use.

Dealers know what cereals are and that the substitutes prepared therefrom are simply different forms of roasted grain. Chicory, however, is the root of a plant of the same family as the dandelion. This root is dried, cleaned and roasted with a very small quantity of oil, after which it is ground or powdered as desired.

The average retail dealer using one of the small individual roasting plants will have very little demand for either of the products mentioned above. Most of his brands will be sold in the bean and ground for the customer upon request. His business should be built up upon good blends of straight coffee upon which a fair margin of profit should be figured.

If he is planning to do business solely on a price basis and is selling compounds because he can put out a cheap product, he does not need the machine at all. He cannot roast either cereals or chicory, and as Rios are bought principally on a price basis, he can get them about as cheap roasted as he can green. He will gain nothing at all but the additional labor of roasting his Rio coffee.

Medium and high grade coffees are purchased on a different basis, and with blends made up from such coffees the situation is quite different.

Question: * * * . N. J.—Would you be so kind as to tell me the best coffee roasting machine and the lowest cash price, f. o. b. factory; about twenty-five pounds capacity? Also could a live man make a nice living in a town of 5,000 inhabitants, with no competition from any other roasting plant? There are only retail grocers here and they make no big howl about coffee.

Answer.—For a roaster of twenty-five pounds capacity you would probably get the best results from the Royal machine, manufactured by the A. J. Deer Co. If you will address a letter to the A. J. Deer Co., Hornell, N. Y., mentioning our name, you will get a prompt reply and they will send you a catalogue, price list, etc.

There is no question but that a good business can be worked up in a town of 5,000 inhabitants where you have everything your own way as stated in your letter. This cannot be done by simply opening a store, putting in a roaster and waiting for customers to come to you for their orders. You will have to go after the trade, and the more territory you can cover the better will be your results. It is often possible in working up a business of this kind to sell the farmers in five or ten-pound lots and take butter and eggs in exchange, which can then be sold at a good profit. One thing to be guarded against in this business is credit. Sell for cash and the proposition should succeed. Sell for credit and the chances are that it will not be a success.

Answer to R. W. H., Shamokin, Pa.—If you will write to the A. J. Deer Co. you can get full particulars with reference to this small machine.

There is no literature published on coffee that would be of any benefit to you other than what you would get from articles in the trade press. The articles appearing in the various publications, including the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World," are up to date, while the few books that have been published contain much that is absolutely useless.

Green coffees would cost you from 15½ up to 20 cents per pound, according to the different grades desired. If you put this in your roaster we should be very glad to take up this question with you suggesting green coffees and blends. One hundred pounds of green coffee will weigh 84 pounds when roasted, losing 16 pounds, or 16 per cent.

If you write to the "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" and state how many are missing in the series, we think they will be very glad to mail additional copies if they have them on hand.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

No change has occurred in the tea market during the week, beyond the fact that low-grade Ceylons and Indias are still working up and are now within sight of 20 cents in a large way. They will probably not go much higher, and are really not intrinsically worth the present price, for a tea which is worth 8 to 10 cents more can be bought for about 3 cents more. Low-grade Congous, the only substitute for low-grade Ceylons and Indias, are also tending higher. Other teas are unchanged and in fair seasonable demand.

Coffee.

Coffee is very dull, weak and unsatisfactory. All grades of Rio and Santos, except the finest, are weak and depressed. Options have fallen below the very low point of last August. Fine Santos coffee on spot demands a premium because it is scarce and will continue to do so for three or four months until new coffee comes in. Mild coffees are also somewhat weaker, and concessions of ¼ to ⅜ of a cent can now be obtained on most grades. Java and Mocha unchanged. Mocha very firm.

Sugar.

The sugar market is weak and all refiners have dropped prices during the week, but recovered slightly later. Granulated is now on the basis of 3.85 to 3.90 cents, the lowest price for a long time. Early in the week raw sugar stiffened up a trifle, but later on the news of heavy receipts and large surplus in Cuba, weakened down again It looks as if prices might even decline further, certainly if the refiners continue to squabble among themselves. The demand is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is seasonably active at ruling prices. Sugar syrup is unchanged and in light demand. Molasses is in fair demand at unchanged prices.

Fish.

Norway mackerel are firm and tending higher, though they are probably no higher than a week ago. The demand is very fair. Other mackerel unchanged and neglected. Cod, hake and haddock steady to firm and in fair demand. Salmon should improve in demand shortly, although it is not very active now; prices are unchanged. Domestic and foreign sardines are unchanged and very scarce and high.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are 2½ cents higher and in a large way Maryland Standard 3s are now held firmly at 72½ cents f. o. b.; 2s are 55 cents. It is apparently impossible now to buy under this price. The outlook is firm, but the present demand only fairly active. Corn and peas are unchanged from a week ago; demand fair. Several packers are sold up on future peas, and packers are beginning to be on future corn. Apples are firm and high; demand fair. California canned goods and small Eastern canned goods are all quiet at ruling prices.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are much unsettled, with assortments badly broken. Size 60s are particularly scarce and have advanced almost a full cent. The general advance in the East has probably not been over ¼ to ½ cent. The outlook is firm, with probable further advances on medium sizes especially. The demand is fair. Peaches are beginning to move, though prices have not yet advanced. They should do so, as they are very low. Apricots are unchanged and quiet. Seeded raisins are slightly higher in secondary markets, but are still considerably below the California combination's parity. Currants and other dried fruits quiet and unchanged in price.

Beans and Peas.

Domestic pea beans and marrows are unchanged in price and in moderate demand. California limas, however, continue to soar, and during the week have advanced another 20 points. This makes 70 cents per 100 from a month or so ago, and carries the market in the East in a large way, to 6.70 cents per pound. The chance is it may reach 7 cents before it is done, for stocks are undoubtedly very light. Green and Scotch peas are unchanged, weak and dull.

Provisions.

The demand for smoked meats is very light and the market is generally reported dull. Prices are steady and unchanged. Both pure and compound lard are in very light demand at ruling prices. Barrel pork, dried beef and canned meats are in slow sale and stocks are reported light.

Butter.

The consumptive demand for butter is at the moment very light, while the receipts of fresh butter continue liberal for the season. These conditions, with the heavy stocks in storage, have caused a decline of 4 cents per pound during the week. The quality of the butter arriving is fully up to the standard, and the consumptive demand will improve as soon as retailers can pass on the decline that has occurred in the first hands' market. Prices may decline somewhat further, however, before the market settles.

Eggs.

During the week the roads have opened and eggs have commenced to arrive in large quantities. The quality is fancy. Prices have accordingly taken the expected tumble and are 10 cents lower than a week ago, which gets the market about where it was a year ago. The consumptive demand has not yet responded to the decline, but will do so as soon as retailers begin to buy at the reduced prices. There will then be a better consumptive demand and a more active market.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand is increasing as the spring advances, but the market is about unchanged for the week, except for a slight hardening. Stocks are light and no important change seems likely until new cheese begins to arrive in May.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Evaporated Apples, Etc.

Outside the demand for small quantities, there is practically nothing doing locally in the evaporated apple market. Stocks are getting pretty well cleaned up and the packers are not inclined to look around for further supplies.

Prime quality in 50-lb. boxes is quotable at 8¾ to 9 cents for 1913 crop, and 8¼ to 8½ cents for cold storage. Choice, either old or new, 9¼ to 9½ cents. Fancy, up to 13 cents.

Raspberries are firmer and desirable quality is hard to buy below 23½ to 24 cents in barrels.

C. C. Hall.

Rochester, N. Y.

Imported Fish Specialties.

The market is practically bare of all kinds of kegs, both mixed and milkers of Holland herrings and of barrels and halves, a very few remain unsold. The situation is practically the same abroad. Very little remains unsold, and while it is an inconvenience to be without the stock just when there is a good demand, owing to the Lenten trade approaching, it is gratifying to see that practically all will be sold before the season is over, thus we shall be able to start with new goods when next season opens up, which is not always the case.

Stocks of Scotch herring in this market are also very much reduced. They have been selling very nicely during the last week, although at the expense of values.

The catch of sloe herrings in Norway has not been very satisfactory, and the quality has not been as good as usual, fish being rather meagre and thin. Consequently the stocks of Iceland fat herrings seem to be very good property, and there is not very much of them left, so the herring market, taking all in all, is in excellent shape.

There has been quite a little stir in the mackerel market in Norway and Sweden. Two of the largest exporters, one in Norway and one in Sweden, have combined. They have made an offer to the combined fishermen to handle the entire output on a commission basis, claiming that in getting the selling control of the entire output of Scandinavian mackerel, they could get much better prices and return to the fishermen a lot more money than they have ever had before for their fish. The Government of both Sweden and Norway have taken a hand in this controversy and meetings are now going on in Norway and in Sweden between the two exporters and their representatives and the representatives of the fishermen, and nothing definite has been decided as yet.

The principal export of these mackerel is to America, and the American importers do not look exactly pleased at the prospect of being obliged to take their supplies of mackerel from practically a trust. It seems that quite a good deal of opposition has developed. We ourselves have put ourselves d on record as strongly opposed to a combination, and we have publi some articles in some of the Sca navian papers abroad, which we be will have some effect on the situa Of course, even if such a combina should come to take place, there be always enough fishermen outsid the combination from whom we can our supply of fish. Our standpoint always been at open market, and believe in honest competition and trust control. This is the position we have taken and this is the p we are trying to make clear to friends in Scandinavia. It will be interesting to see what the outcom this controversy will be.

In the meanwhile, Norway mack are selling very nicely here and pr are tending to advance.

There has been very little chang the sardine market. The demand tinues very good. From Norway have had a few more fish, altho nothing like being able to supply demand. Some of our best-kn brands have been out of the ma several months and we are anxio awaiting the beginning of the sum fishing next May, hoping that the s will be very good and allow us to sufficient supplies to supply our t again as usual.

Standard Canned Goods.

The stormy weather of the prev ten days again prevailed last week, the daily conferences of the elder sta men of the canned tomato frater were rudely interrupted thereby, h the paucity of interesting news cerning the market. From the Ind apolis oracle comes the cheerful tid that the tomato market in the W shows strong symptoms of an ac spring trade with a higher range prices almost certain a little later The steady shipping of tomatoes f the big warehouses in Baltimore lea vacant spaces which cannot be f again before the next canning sea rolls around. Nothing has been d up to this date, toward getting the gr ers and the canners together to fi contract price for the 1914 crop.

The same steady buying of toma for prompt shipment continues, and goods are going into consumption fast as can reasonably be expected, m more so than usual in midwinter. orders are for lots of one or two loads, and requests for quick shipm show that they are actually needed the moment. A strong sign of acti in the spring is the increasing requ for prices covering free storage insurance until lake and rail naviga opens up in the latter part of Ap To-day's prices look inviting to jobber. For future delivery there a small increase over the buying of matoes last week, but neither the c ners nor the jobbers show anxiety trade heavily in them, as yet. It g without saying that they will be ac enough before long.

Editor "Science of Advertising."

Dear Sir:—I am inclosing herewith a copy of an ad. which I had in our local paper, also used same to deliver about town. Being very much interested in your advertising page, I inclose same that I may be able to get your opinion.

Thanking you in advance, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
E. H. VANCAMP.

The circular sent with this was of rather awkward size and shape, I think —9 x 22 inches. A circular that size is rather hard to handle. It presents a very good appearance typographically, but my reproduction will probably not look very well, for owing to its shape I must get it very narrow in order to get it short enough to go on the page. Here is the reproduction in the next column.

Without eliminating anything but the unnecessary words, I can cut down the length of this circular probably one-fourth. I should have made the head, "We Raise Your Wages," or "How We Raise Your Wages." That alone tells the story. I should have also stopped in the introduction when I had carried the argument to the point where wages were raised. It was not necessary, in my judgment, to say anything about cutting down expenses and increasing savings. One practically includes the other, and the three expressions together have not a bit more strength than the one alone.

* * *

See how condensation saves one line out of the two lines in the last paragraph of the introduction:—

Everything Fresh and Clean, Not Old Shelf Goods.

I see the same chance for condensation in the paragraphs of this advertisement. In the rolled oats paragraph I can also save a line thus:—

Rolled Oats.

One of the best and most wholesome breakfast foods. Extra clean and fresh from the mill.

8 lbs. for 25c.

Almost the same could be done with every paragraph here. Where there is plenty of room I should have put the price in the same line with the last of the text, instead of making a separate line of it in every case.

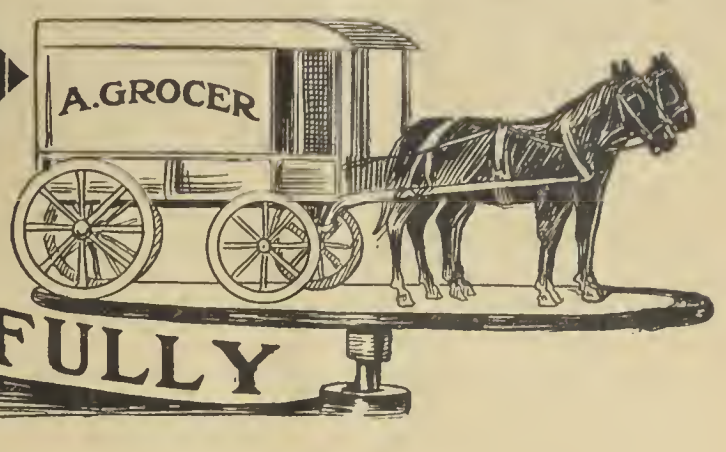
The Delivery Question!



WEIGH IT CAREFULLY

Weigh the delivery question carefully. It is a large expense item in your business. Take the cost per week of keeping two horses and paying two drivers, divide it by the number of orders delivered and you'll be surprised at the cost per order. You'll see what has been taking too large a share of your profits.

One International Motor Truck will do as much work as two horses and wagons; by using it you materially reduce your delivery cost. No matter what it has been costing you per order to deliver goods, you'll be able to do it for much less money with an International Motor Truck. The saving is just like that much extra profit on every order. Don't guess about motor delivery—let us send you the facts. Send for our descriptive catalogue. Tell us all the particulars about your delivrey problem and we'll let you know how we can help you.

CCLI.—Directors Who Do Not Direct and What Happened to Some of Them.

The following letter inspires an article on the above subject:—

Buffalo, N. Y., March 17, 1904.
Elton J. Buckley, Esq.

Dear Sir:—Here is a piece of trouble which may interest you enough to answer. Several months ago I was elected a director in a corporation in this city that manufactures stationery and appliances of that nature for merchants' use. I did not wish to be elected, but some of the stockholders got on my blind side by claiming that they wanted the use of the name, which would help them get other stockholders, so I finally consented. I attended the first meeting, but none after that and the corporation is now bankrupt, and suit has been begun against me and three other directors on the ground that we did not attend to our duties, and our staying away left a dishonest manager free to steal all the company's money. They have sued us for a large sum, and it is a serious matter to me and my three associates. We have engaged lawyers here, but somehow I personally would like to have your opinion of the case. You can give this in any way you like, but if you publish it, do not print my name.

Respectfully yours,

* * * *

Directors who do not direct, and what happens to some of them.

Of course I do not know the facts of the Buffalo case. It may or may not be that failing to pay attention to the duties of director was the main cause in the wasting of the company's money. If it was not, the suit against the directors will fail, even though they were negligent in not attending to their duties.

What I shall do is to lay down the general principles of law governing the case, leaving this correspondent to apply them to his own facts.

I notice one strong tendency among business men, particularly as they grow older and more successful, and this correspondent's case is just another illustration of it. A business man succeeds. He becomes well known in his community and is regarded as a man of strength and substance. People begin to invite him to become a director in various enterprises, philanthropic and otherwise. He feels complimented when they tell him they want the prestige of his name, and that "it won't involve any work; you won't need to attend any meetings; we want your name." In many cases he yields, is elected, and never attends any of the meetings. I assume that this is precisely the case of my Buffalo correspondent.

A director who does not direct is like a man living over a volcano. There may not be an eruption, but if there is he will get burnt. For the law is growing more and more severe upon the corporate director who does not direct. Here is the whole rule, quoted from a well known work on the subject:—

> The directors of a corporation are personally liable to the corporation or to its representatives for suffering the corporate funds or property to be wasted or lost by gross negligence or non-attention to their duties. This makes them liable for losses happening through their want of a reasonable supervision of the affairs of the corporation, through their gross neglect of corporate duties, through their habitual non-attendance at meetings of the board. In other words, for that gross and habitual negligence and non-attendance which is tantamount to gross negligence and is justly held to be a breach of the trust which they have assumed.

Even more than this, directors who do not direct are responsible to creditors of the corporation if the funds which might have gone to pay the debts have been wasted through the directors' negligence. The assets of every corporation are always considered a trust fund for its creditors.

In Pennsylvania recently a case of precisely this sort appeared in the courts. The corporation in question was a loan company which had been particularly exploited because its directorate was composed of strong busines men, well known locally.

A whole lot of these directors were of the type who had yielded to flattering requests to let themselves be elected directors "on account of the prestige which the use of your name will give us." They never attended any meetings and this left the way open to outrageous dissipation of the company's capital. The corporation sued the non-attending directors, on the ground that their neglect had opened the way for what had happened, and all but one was obliged to pay a large sum.

Under the well-settled law it makes no difference that the actual wasting was done by other directors who did it intentionally. If the stay-at-homes could have detected and stopped it by attending the meetings and giving the attention that their position required, they can be made to pay back all losses that their negligence permitted to occur. Ignorance of what is going on is no excuse when it is a director's duty to know, and it is no defense that a director is serving gratuitously, either.

It is a splendid rule not to accept election to the directorship of any corporation unless you are willing to attend meetings and direct.

Question: * * *, Lansdale, Pa.—Find enclosed three clippings of a piano contest that William Boehme, of this town, is running. We "Modern Merchant and Grocery World" readers of Lansdale would thank you if you would inform us if this voting contest is legal and also if weekly newspapers have a right to print advertisements of this kind. Also what would be the proper step to take to stop the same if it is illegal? I think you published something on this several months ago if I remember rightly. Thanking you for the few moments of your busy time.

Answer.—In my judgment this scheme is clearly a lottery, and is in violation both of the Pennsylvania State and Federal lottery The idea is shown by the foll portions of the advertise sent:—

"Retiring From Business" Before the Time.

If I was in business and had a store, take it from me I'd never "retire," as people say, no matter how much coin I had, unless I had enough to go away somewhere and not care a darn whether the store got along or not.

Of course it's easy to say what you would do in a case that ain't ever likely to happen. That's a cinch. You can throw all sorts of bluffs that way and nobody can ever call you. Me, I spose when I'm 102 I'll still be on the road. If I ever have a store it'll be an old clothes place or something like that, believe me.

I got a certain customer for my house about thirteen years ago, and I always held him. Him and me got along like two ducks in a puddle. He realized I was one of the finest men that ever lived and he treated me that way, instead of saying things to me, like a lot of my customers do, that no gent ought to say to another.

About a year ago he retired. "Retired" is polite for lay down. He had made a tidy little bit of money and he figured out what was the use? He didn't have to work, there was only him and his wife, he was 65 years old, and he might just as well pull out. So he sold the store to a couple of his clerks and laid back for a good long loaf without caring a ding.

At least that's what he and his wife doped out. But that ain't what happened.

My old friend is plumb set in his ways. He has his ideas about how a store ought to be run, he followed 'em while he was running his, and nobody else had a look in. You could argue with him till your tongue wore out—if he'd thought it out and made his mind up, nothing doing.

The two clerks had their ideas, too, and a big bunch of 'em were a different color from the old man's ideas. Right away after they bought the store, they started in to change things. Why shouldn't they, between you and me?
